

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

Ⓢ

Bdg
nfe

25- Gub'

$\frac{11}{18}$

EDWARDUS

Adornavit CAROLUS

Georgius Militans

S^t Georgii triumphans

The HISTORY

of
That most famous Saynt and Souldier of CHRIST IESUS
S^t GEORGE of Cappadocia

Asserted from the Fictions of the middle ages of the Church and separation of the present

Whereunto is added a List of all the Prelates of the Garter, and other Officers thereunto belonging the 2^d Edit: Corrected & enlarged by Peter. Heylyn.

Right precious in the sight of the Lord is the Death of his Sayntes.
Psal. 116.

London Printed for Henry Seyle and are to be sold at his shop the Tiger's head in Saynt Pauls
Churchyard.

1633.

Proiectus est mag-us ille Draco. Ap. 12

Hec gloria est omnibus Sanctis eius. ps.
149

THE HISTORIE

OF

That most famous Saint and Souldier of

CHRIST IESVS;

St. GEORGE

OF

CAPPADOCIA;

Asserted from the Fictions, of the middle ages of the CHVRCH, and opposition of the present.

The Institution of the most Noble Order of S. GEORGE, named the G A R T E R.

A Catalogue of all the Knights thereof, from the first institution, to this present :

AS ALSO

Of the principall Officers thereunto belonging.

*The second Edition, corrected and enlarged
by P E T. H E Y L Y N :*

Psalme 116. v. 15.

Right precious in the sight of the Lord, is the death of his Saints.

L O N D O N,

Printed by Thomas Harper, for Henry Seyle, and are to be sold at his Shop, the signe of the Tygers-head in Saint Pauls Church-yard, 1633.

The. Martyn

R. 533.958

D

mythology

TO THE MOST HIGH
AND MIGHTY PRINCE
CHARLES,

By the Grace of God, King of GREAT BRITAIN, FRANCE, and IRELAND, Defender of the Faith, &c. and Sovereigne of the most Noble Order of Saint GEORGE, called the GARTER.

Most Dread Sovereigne :

Y Our gracious entertainement of my first endeuours in this cause, encouraged me to perfect what I had begunne, and cleere the Historie of Saint George from all future question. Which being finished, in all humilitie I lay it at your Princely feet; humbly beseeching pardon, that I have dared a second time to trouble your most sacred Majestie with the same discourse. A businesse of so intricate and involved a nature as this was, wherein I had no guide to follow, nor any path to treade, but what I made unto my selfe; might well exact a second labour from an abler hand. Nor could I meete with all those doubts, or still all those clamours which this unquiet age had raised against a Saint so famous, till by exposing to the world, those my first conceptions, I found what further might be said, either in opposition to the Martyr, or confutation of his Storie. Which being found, and more enquirie made into the monuments of the Church: I have accordingly, not onely satisfied all objections which possibly I could bring unto my selfe, or have heard from others; but fortified the cause by many antient testimonies, and Authors of unquestioned credit, not before produced. My selfe, and whatsoever I have done in this present argument, I gladly consecrate and devote to your most excellent Majestie; to whom, as Sovereigne of that noble Order, entituled by Saint Georges name, the cognizance of the cause doth of right belong. That God who gave you life, fulfill your sacred Majestie with the life of God: and when that you are sated with the long and sweet fruition of an earthly Crowne, and growne an aged blessing unto this your people; renew againe your daies in the heaven of heavens, and crowne your blessed temples with an immortall wreath of glory. With which unfained expression of my zeale and dutie to your Majestie, I doe in all humility subscribe my selfe

Your Majesties most loyall Subject and faithfull Servant,

PET. HEYLYN.

To all those most illustrious Kings, Princes, and Peeres, Knights of the Noble and most famous Order of Saint GEORGE, called the G A R T E R.

Most illustrious Kings, Princes, and Peeres :

*I*t is not yet two yeeres since I presented you with an assertion of the History of Saint George. Who having for 1200. yeeres beene reckoned by the Church of God, and all the learned men thereof, for a blessed Martyr : in these last dayes hath beene affronted by two sorts of enemies, who though they differed each from other, agreed together to condemne both the Saint and Historie. Which cause (wherein your noble Order was so deeply interested) when I saw no man else take up, I adventured on it : and did accordingly (most excellent Kings, Princes, and Peeres) inscribe unto you my performance in that argument. But of so narrow a nature, commonly are both our understandings and inventions, that hardly can we comprehend at once, so plentifull a variety of discourse and arguments, as time and second cogitations doe often minister unto us. Hence is it that the issue of those nobler pages, are many times not perfect at the first deliverie; & doe require a second birth for their accomplishment. And so it was with my performance in this worke : which when it first was published and brought forth into the world, was not so fortunate as to receive perfection at the same instant also. But now an further search into the monuments and treasures of antiquity, and upon conference

The Epistle Dedicatorie

ference with some men which were no friends unto the Storie, I have not onely more assured the cause it selfe, by evidence unquestioned, and a more generall consent of all times and Authors; but satisfied in this, some doubts which had been made against the former. Though for the fashion and proportions of it, it be almost the same it was, yet notwithstanding it is growne in every part thereof, and both increased in hulke and substance:
The modell, though it be the same, yet is the building stronger, and more impregnable then before, against the clamour and assaults of either enemy. Nor have I onely bent my studies to assert the Patron, but spent some time about the Order: the monuments and records whereof, I have searched and scene, and spared no paines which might conduce unto the lustre of that most excellent and heroicke institution. The Catalogue and succession of those worthies which have gone before you in the same,
I have cleered and perfected; drawne up a list of all such principall officers as have done service thereunto: and as I verily am perswaded, laid downe a farre more honourable and right originall thereof, then that which commonly is pretended. What ever I have done herein, eithers in reference to the Saint, or the institution, I doe most willingly submit, next under my most gracious and dread Sovereigne, to you most excellent Kings, Princes, and Peeres: aspiring to no other ends, then onely to pas-sesse a place in your good opinions, and to expresse the world, with what sincere affection I doe desire to be accounted

The most unfained devoted unto your Noble and Heroicke Order,

PET. HEYLYN.

SYLLABVS CAPITVM

PART I.

The Preface.

- (1)  He nature of Curiosity : (2) And pronenessse of the present Age to new fancies. (3) The opening of the cause in hand. (4) The Reasons which induced the Author to undertake the Patronage of Saint Georges Cause, and History. (5) His resolution in it ; and the manner of his proceeding. (6) The method of the whole. (7) The motives and designe of this new Edition. (8) The Authors free submission of himselfe, and his performance, to the wise and learned.

CHAP. I.

- (1) Three kinds of Imposture. (2) The first founder of the Legendary or fabulous Histories. (3) Iacobus de Voragi-
B no

The Contents.

PART I.

ne, the Author of the Golden Legend & his time and quality. (4) His fictions of St. Georges killing of the Dragon. (5) The remainder of that Legend continued out of Ovid. (6) The fable of Saint Georges Birth in England: (7) Poetically countenanced by Edm. Spencer. (8) The Legend of the Dragon rejected by the learned Romanists. (9) Defended by Geo. Wicelius. (10) What may be alleged in defence thereof. (11) The See removed from Africk into Asia.

CHAP. II.

(1) Of Hereticks and the original (2) Their early practices to corrupt the Gospel. (3) Their arts to countenance their cause. (4) Their plots discovered, and condemned by Councils, and by Fathers. (5) The injury done by Hereticks unto the History of Saint George. (6) The Arians convicted of fraud and forgery. (7) Saint Athanasius accused for Magick by the Arians. (8) Of Alexandra, Dioclesians wife in the Arian Legend. (9) The indiscretion of some Church-Historians, in their choice of Argument.

CHAP. III.

(1) A proposition of the two contrary opinions. (2) Calvin the first that ever bid defiance to Saint George. (3) Melancthon misreported by the Papists. (4) Calvins opinion in it, by whom seconded in forreine Churches. (5) And by whom in England. (6) Saint George by whom first made an Arian Bishop. (7) This last opinion seconded both by some forreigne Divines; (8) And some English also. (9) The two opinions impossible to be reconciled. (10) The fruitlesse labour of Doctor Raynolds to effect it. (11) An examination of the Arguments drawne from the Canon of Gelasius. (12) And the authority of Cardinall Baronius.

CHAP. IIII.

(1) A conjecture at those reasons which may make the History

PART. I.

The Contents.

story of St. George suspected. (2) The Church of Rome too prodigall in bestowing Divine honours. (3) False Saints no prejudice unto the true. (4) The lives of Saints how fabulously and vainly written. (5) What might induce the Church-Historians to that vein of writing. (6) The undertaking of Aloysius Lippomanus, how well performed. (7) The inter-mixture of vaine Fables no prejudice to truth of Story. (8) Of Arthur, Guy of Warwick, and Sir Bevis. (9) Hereticall dreames and practises not able to beare downe the truth. (10) An application of the whole to St. George.

CHAP. V.

(1) Undoubted truths the ground of fabulous reports: (2) The privilege of two French Churches, and the Fables thence arising. (3) The Barons case of Galcoygne. (4) Saint Georges killing of the Dragon how farre it may be justified. (5) The Portraiture of Constantine. (6) The Order of the Dragon, and of Saint Michael. (7) Saint George how pictured commonly: and what it signifieth. (8) The memorable story of Saint Georges Horse. (9) The picture of Saint George how made a fable: and by whom (10) The entertainment of it in the Church of Rome (11) The reformation of the Misfall. (12) A small answer to all those on the part of Calvin;

CHAP. VI.

(1) An entrance to the History of George the Arian Bishop. (2) The controversie stated, and drawne up to three conclusions. (3) George frequently mistooke for Gregory in ancient writers. (4) A rule to rectifie their errors touching George and Gregory. (5) George put for Gregory in Athanasius Epistle ad Orthodoxos: (6) As also in his Tract de Synodis Seleuciz &c. and in Philostorgius. (7) An answer to some other passages in Athanasius. (8) Cappadox used proverbially for a lewd and wicked man. (9) George proved to be no Cappadocian, out of Nazianzen. (10) George borne at Epiphania in the Province of Cilicia: (11) Two maine objections answered, which may probably be brought against Ammianus and his testimony.

CHAP. VII.

- (1) The life of George the Arian before he was appointed Bishop. (2) His butcherly behaviour in that holy Dignity. (3) Degraded in the Councell of Seleucia. (4) An Aversion of Drusius in making George the Laodicean to be the same with him of Alexandria. (5) Georges returne to Alexandria the occasion of his death. (6) Not done to death for his religion, by the Gentiles. (7) Never reputed as a Martyr in the Christian Church. (8) Actius not made Deacon by this George of Alexandria. (9) George not accounted for a Martyr amongst the Arians. (10) The infinite differences betweene the Arian George and Saint George the Martyr. (11) A briefe touch at the residue of Doctor Raynolds arguments. (12) Sir W. Rawleighs resolution in received opinions.

The second part.

CHAP. I.

- (1) THe Name and Etymology of George. (2) The Story of Saint George by Metaphrastes. (3) The time of that Author, and the reason of his name. (4) The opinion of him in the Greeke Church. (5) This Metaphrastes not the same with Simcon the Scholemaster. (6) The Country, Parentage, and first fortunes of Saint George. (7) The state of the Roman Empire at that time: and persecution then beginning. (8) The speech of George unto the Tyrants: his torments, and his death. (9) The manner of his death according to Frier Anselme; and the English Story. (10) The intervening passages which occurre in Metaphrastes. (11) Arguments Authoritate

authoritate negativè, of what credit in the Schools.

CHAP. II.

(1) Magnentius mentioned in the former Story, what hee was. (2) Diospolis or Lydda, not the place of St. Georges suffering, but of his buriall. (3) That Saint George suffered death at Nicomedia. (4) Pallio, what it signifieth; and the error of Vincentius in it. (5) The former story justified in the generals by Eusebius. (6) The history of Saint George whether particularly extant in that Author (7) Saint Ambroses testimony of our Martyr. (8) The time and Canon of P. Gelasius. (9) The story of St. George why reckoned as apocryphall. (10) The meaning of Gelasius not to explode the Martyr with his History. (11) The Arian George not likely in so small a tract of time to be reputed as a Martyr. (12) A catalogue of the Authors cited in this booke, which have made honorable mention of Saint George; as also of those Princes, Peeres, and Prelates which have done him honour: digested in their times and ages.

CHAP. III.

(1) The state of learning in the Church divided into two naturall dayes. (2) The times and learning of venerable Bede. (3) His testimonies of Saint George. (4) Of Dacianus King of Persia, and who he was, (5) Persia taken in some Authors for the Eastern Countries. (6) Areconciliation of the other doubts touching this Dacianus. (7) The Martyrologies of Vlsuardus, Rabanus Maurus, and Notgerus. (8) Saint George how said to have converted many people. (9) The witnesse of Vincentius, Iacobus, and Antonius Florent. (10) Vestem exuere militarem, the meaning of it, and when used. (11) The suffrage of Sabellicus, Schedel, Bergomenfis, and Volateran.

CHAP. IV.

(1) The testimony given Saint George in some publique monuments monuments of the Greeke Church. (2) Saint George called μεγαλομάρτυς, and ἑσπεροφόρος. (3) The evidence of the Fasti, Siculi, Cedrenus, Nicephorus Callistus, and Nicephorus Gregoras. (4) Of Cantacuzenus, Maximus, and Damascen the Menke. (5) Of Callicles, (6) and Philes, two Greeke Poets. (7) Of the Magdeburgians, and some Lutheran Divines. (8) Of the Church of Saxony, Brandenburg, and Pomerland, &c. (9) The suffrage of Hospinian, and Danæus, both Calvinists. (10) The testimony and assent of Master Fox, in his Acts and Monuments. (11) The Arian George condemned by those, who speak with honour of our Martyr. (12) A recollection and application of the whole proofes.

CHAP. V.

(1) Four severall wayes used by the Church, to keepe alive the memory of the Martyrs. (2) The way of Martyrologies, how ancient. (3) The Roman Martyrologie: and what it testifieth of St. George. (4) The nature of the Greeke Menologies, and what they witnesse of our Martyr. (5) Commemoration of the Dead, how used in the Church Primitive. (6) Commemoration of S. George, in the time of Gregorie the Great. (7) The depravation of the ancient use of it in the Church of Rome (8) The publique service of that Church on Saint Georges day. (9) Arguments drawne from the Church service, of what validity. (10) The service for Saint Georges day in the Church of Greece: (11) As also in the Greeke Church in Hierusalem; and in those of Æthiopia. (12) St. Georges day when made a festivall, and by whom.

CHAP. VI.

(1) The honour done unto the Dead, in the decent buriall of their bodies. (2) The reliques of the Saints, of what esteeme in the Church Primitive. (3) The care of Gregory of Tours to preserve his writings: and what he testifieth of St. George's reliques.

reliques. (4) What mention there is made of them in Aymonius, and others. (5) What may be hence concluded from St. Georges reliques. (6) Churches distinguished anciently by the names of Saints: and for what reason. (7) St. Georges Churches in Lydda, and in Ramula, made afterwards a Bishops Seat. (8) St. Georges Church built by Sidonius Archbishop of Mentz. (9) That mention'd in St. Gregories Epistles. (10) St. Georges Church in Rome; the title of a Cardinal. (11) Churches erected to St. George in Alexandria, and elsewhere. (12) Of Faustus Rhegiensis. (13) And the Pseudo-Martyr in Sulpitius. (14) An application of the rule in Lerinenlis, unto the businesse now in hand:

CHAP. VII.

(1) S. George how he became to be accounted the chiefe Saint of Souldiers. (2) S. George when first esteemed a chiefe Patron of Christianity. (3) The expedition of the Westerne Princes to the Holy Land. (4) The Story of the succours brought unto their Army by St. George. (5) Two other apparitions of that Saint to the Christian armies. (6) The probability of the former miracle disputed. (7) An essay of the famous battell of Antiochia, by way of Poem. (8) Saint George the most generally received Saint in the Church Christian. (9) And of great fame among the Turkes.

CHAP. VIII.

(1) The honours done by Kings, to others; of what reckoning. (2) Arguments used by the Iewes, in the defence of their Temple of Hierusalem. (3) Of Monasteries dedicated to Saint George. (4) St. Georges Canons, a Religious order. (5) St. George by what Kings honoured anciently, as a chiefe Saint of Soldiery. (6) Of honours done unto him by the Muscovites; and of the military Order of St. George, in Austria. (7) The German or Dutch Order, called Sanct Georgen Schiles. (8) St. Georges banks in Genoa. (9) And his band, in Italye. (10) The Georgians why so called: and of the honour done by them to our Martyr. (11) A view of severall places dedicated of St. George. (12) A recollection of the Arguments before used, in the present businesse.

The third part.

CHAP. I.

(1) *S*aint George not anciently esteemed the Patron of the English. (2) *O*f what esteeme amongst the Saxons. (3) *C*hurches erected to him by the Normans here in England. (4) *S*t. Georges Chappell in Kelmescot, Com. Oxon. and the indulgence granted to it. (5) *H*is apparition to King Richard, in the Holy Land. (6) *W*hat may bee said in generall, touching the apparition of the Saints: (7) *A*nd what in this particular. (8) *S*t. George when first entituled particularly to the English. (9) *T*he honours done him here, and among the Irish. (10) *S*t. Georges day, when made a solemne festinall, with us, in England: and by whom abrogated. (11) *S*ome stumbling in King Edwards reigne, at St. Georges History.

CHAP. II.

(1) *O*f Military orders. (2) *K*ing Arthurs Knights of the Round Table. (3) *W*indfor made famous, by the institution of that Order; as other places were for the holding of it. (4) *M*ortimers Round table at Killingworth; and King Edward the thirds at Windfor: in imitation of King Arthurs. (5) *T*he institution of the most noble order of S. Georges knights. (6) *W*hy called of the Garter. (7) *T*he fable of the Countesse of Salisbury, and her garter; examined, and rejected. (8) *O*f the Castle and Colledge of Windfor. (9) *S*ir W. Raleighs opinion, touching killing of the Dragon: (10) *A*nd of those also, who desire to have the George, Symbolicall.

(1) *T*he

CHAP. III.

(1) The manner of the election of Saint Georges Knights :
(2) And their installation. (3) The order how they sit in St. Georges Chappell. (4) The severall wayes whereby the places are made vacant. (5) An answer to a common error about this Order. (6) Saint Georges Festivall, and the celebration of it. (7) The Robes and habit of the Order. (8) The Officers belonging to it ; their prerogatives and pensions. (9) A Catalogue of all Saintes Georges Knights from the first institution of the Order, till this present. (10) The Conclusion of the whole.

THE

THE HISTORY

OF

That most famous Saint and Souldier of

CHRIST IESUS,

St. GEORGE of CAPPADOCIA;

Asserted from the Fictions of the middle Ages of the Church, and opposition of the present.

THE PREFACE:

(1) The nature of Curiosity: (2) And proneness of the present Age to new fancies. (3) The opening of the cause in hand. (4) The Reasons which induced the Author to undertake the Patronage of Saint Georges Cause and History. (5) His resolution in it, and the manner of his proceeding. (6) The method of the whole. (7) The motives and designs of this new Edition. (8) The Authors free submission of himselfe and his performance to the wise and learned.

(1)

T is a sad Complaint of Melchior Canus, that many of us in this more neat and curious Age, doe peevishly (to say no worse) reject those ancient Stories which are commended to us in the best and gravest Authors. Pleriq; nostra hac etate, per- Lib. II. cap. 4.
versè, ne dicam impudenter, res, quas esse gestas gravissimi autores testati sunt, in dubium vocant. So he; and certainly he spake it not at randome: but as a man which well fore-saw to what extremities, that restless humour mour of leaving nothing undiscussed ; and not so only, but leaving nothing in the state we found it ; at the last would bring us. For such the nature is of Curiosity, especially if once attended with Selfe-love, and that unquiet spirit of Opposition : that we are alwayes watchfull to pry into the passages of former Times and Authors ; and leave no path untrodden, how crooked and indirect soever, which may conduce to the advancement either of our cause or credit. By meanes whereof, as sometimes haply wee doe good service to the Common-wealth of Learning, in the correcting of an Error : so for the most part, we involve it in uncertainties, or broach new errors under pretence of canvassing the Old ; or by denying credit to Antiquity, wee only teach posterity, how little credit may be due unto our selves.

(2) I say not this, to blunt the edge of any vertuous endeavours : nor to the prejudice of those heroicke spirits, by whom so many of the ancient Writers, which had been buried in their owne dust, and made a prey to moathes and cobwebs, have beene restor'd unto themselves. All may I prosper in my Studies, if I deny the least of due respects to them, to whose most fortunate and painfull travayles, wee owe no lesse than to the Authors. Nor would I gladly be esteem'd a Patron, cyther of lazie ignorance, or of dull credulity: nor willingly be thought to countenance those of the vulgar Heard, who runne into receiv'd opinions, as Calderinus, in Ludovico Vives, did to Masse. *Emm*us erge (sayd he) quia sic placet, in communes errores. Not so. I know it argues a degenerous and ignoble minde ; barely and simply to submit it selfe unto the tyranny of popular fames, or old traditions : not daring once to search into them, to see at least some shew of reason, in our bondage. Much like those noble Housekeepers, so much of old, commended in the Country ; who rather chose to have their judgements question'd, in giving entertainment unto all ; than that their Hospitality should be accused, in excluding any. Onely I sayd it, a little to take downe, if possible; that height of selfe-conceit and stomacke, wherewith too many of us doe affront those Worthies of the former dayes ; and set

set our selves against our Fathers. Which humour if it once possesse us, in spite of him that told us, nihil novum esse sub sole; without regard of him that sayd it, quia vetus est melius; wee must have every thing as new and moderne, as our selves: new Organons for Logicke, new modell's of Divinity; scarce any thing which hath beene hitherto resolv'd, eyther in Philologicall Theologie, or in Philosophie, no not in Ecclesiasticall or civill History; not new, not altered. The tendries and decisions of our Ancestours, growne as unfashionable, as their garments: and if we please our selves in any thing, it must be somewhat which is done according to the newest Cure: So, that were Martial now alive, he might with good applause, correct himselfe in that one passage of his Epigram to Regulus; where hee complaine's, how much the latter wits were disrepected, if compar'd unto the former: he might, I say, correct himselfe, and read it thus:

Hi sunt invidia nimirum Regule mores;

Præferat antiquis, semper ut illa, nova.

Such is the envie of the present dayes,

That onely new conceits are worthy prayse.

(3) That so it is, is more than manifest: how justly, and with what disadvantage to reverend and sacred truth, might soon be made apparant by looking over the particulars. Ανδρας ἢ ὃν ἔστιν ἐν τοῖς ἀρχαῖς, ματαίωτος, in the words of Aristotle. To scan them over all, as it were infinite in it selfe; so were it nothing to the businesse now in hand: unlesse to shew, how much the truth hath suffered, not onely in our present Argument, but in those also. Let those, whose full abilities in all the rarities of Learning, have fitted them for undertakings of this noble nature, adventure in this worke: to make those ancient friends, Antiquity and Verity, shake hands, and live againe together. It is a burden worthy of their shoulders onely; and to them I leave it. For me it is inough, if in the least degree I may be serviceable in this kind; to free one onely captivated truth, out of the Dungeon, where, of late, it was imprison'd: if for the

the incouragement of others, I make it evident in this, quàm magna veritas, how great the truth is, and how mightily it will prevaile. Not to stand longer in the entrance, my purpose is to write in brieft, the Story of that most blessed Saint and Souldier of CHRIST IESUS, St. George of Cappadocia: and to produce such testimonies in defence thereof, as all the Ages of the Church, successively, haue given him. No Saint in all the Calendar, the glorious Company of the Apostles excepted onely, scarce any of the Noble Army of the Martyrs, able to shew a cleerer title to the Crowne of Martyrdome, or to produce more evidence to justifie his right unto that honour: and yet not any of that goodly Fellowship, more ignobly handled; more shamefully disoarded. For having in the generall vouch and confession of the Church, beene reckoned with the Saints departed; a Festivall allotted to his memory, and Temples consecrated by his name: for, having in the latter Ages of the world, beene honour'd as a Patron of Christianity, and of special credit and opinion with us heerein England: we now are taught a lesson so exactly contrary, that fire and water cannot be at greater difference. St. George, if they may be beleev'd which say it, must now no longer be conceiv'd, as one that ever liv'd, or mov'd, or had any being: or if a man at all, a wicked man, an Arian. This they affirm for certaine, and they affirme it with such confidence, as if they meant to leave us nothing, but this miserable choyce; of two such satall mischiefes, both dangerous and extream, to chooe the least.

—Pudet hac opprobria, nobis

Et dici potuisse, & non potuisse refelli

Foule shame it were, should they St. George defie;
And we stand mute, not able to replie.

(4) A thing, as I conceive it, dishonorable unto God, that those of his retinue in the Heaven of Heavens, should at the suit of Curious and unquiet men, be thus put under an Arrest; and so laid up for ever, in the Gaole of utter darkness;

ness; or at the best, bound over to eternall silence and oblivion. A thing, as I conceive it, injurious to the new Jerusalem; made poorer by the losse of such a great and glorious Citizen: and to that blessed Corporation of the Saints themselves, so to be baffled of their rights, and ancient liberties. Nor is it lesse to the dishonour of the holy Church, which hitherto hath reckon'd him among the Saints; and as a Saint, given him the honour due unto his name; nor to the Princes of this kingdome, which have elected him the Patron of their most noble Order of the Garter: or to those famous Peeres, his Knights, which every yeere doe solemnize his Festivall with many noble Ceremonies. Nor lastly, is it lesse to the dishonour of the High Court of Parliament; who since the Reformation hath thought it no impiety to entitle him S. George the Martyr: For in the first of Edward the 6. cap. 14. &c. we find a mention of the free Chappell of S. George the Martyr, situate in the Castle of Windsor, repeated in the first of Queene Elizabeth, cap. 21. and in the 5. of Queene Elizabeth, cap. 2. the Feast of S. George the Martyr is expressly mentioned; to inquire no further. Quod itaque felix sanctumque sit, &c. In the feare, therefore of Almighty God, and to the honour of the Saints, his blessed Courtiers, I have adventured to restore this glorious Martyr to his place: not in the heavens, from whence the powers of man were never able to remove him, but in the good opinions of us men, from which we have of late displaced him. And as my duty bindes mee next, in honour of the Holy Church throughout the World, and to the glory of my gracious Lord and Master, the service of my Country, the satisfaction of my brethren, and for the full content of that most noble Order, which I am sure hate nothing more than Superstitious Vanities: I have endeavored, that neither we become ashamed of our Saint George; nor he of us. Dij captis aspirate meis.

(5) I know that in the prosecution of this Argument, I cannot choose but meet with many prejudices: the names and dictates of those reverend and famous men which have affirmed the contrary; the censures and rebukes of such, who who would have all things passe for currant, which are found extant in their writings. But in the search of truth, wee must not bee afraid of names or censures. Luther had never ventured on the reformation of Religion, had hee beene either frightened by the names of Schoolmen, or terrified by any of the Bulls from Rome, or otherwise afraid of mens Opinions. Nor can I thinke it more unpardonable in me, to dissent from them, then first it was in them, to differ from Antiquity; The rather, because the matter now in hand, is not a principle of the faith against the Eth-nicks; nor any point of doctrine which is maintained against the Papists; wherein to differ from them, might bring danger and disunion: but such, in quibus opes Gracie non consistunt, in which it is no prejudice to the Gospell, to disclaime their tendries. It was a noble saying of the great Philosopher, ὃ δὲν ἐστὶ σωτηρία ἢ ἀλυσίας ὃ τὸ οὐκ ἔστι ἀμαρτία, That when we make a search for truth, wee must have no respect of persons: and thereupon we use it for a Proverbe, amicus Socrates, amicus Plato, magis amica veritas. Truth is the maine of my enquiry, I haue Antiquity to friend, and the tradition of the Church, my Sanctuary. What should I feare in such a cause, and so well seconded? Besides, I cannot thinke, that ever those most blessed Spirits now with G O D, to whom we stand indebted for so many helps in Piety and Learning, did ever hope to have their writings reckoned as unquestionable. Sic instruere majores, posteri imitantur: This only was a privilege of the Apostles, that as they preached, even so we also should beleeve. If so, then as it is no injury unto them, that we joyne with them in an enquiry after Truth, which with such diligence they sought: so neither, if we take another and a nearer way unto it; when we perceive them, either through errour or infirmity, to have gone aside. Their Names as oft as I have cause to use them, I shall not mention without honour: their words I shall lay downe ingenuously, and as I find them; without censure: Their reasons I shall examine modestly, and with due regard; such as their persons doe deserve. Those Authors with whose weapons I have made choice to fight this bat-tell, tell, I shall use also in the same manner; assigning every man his time, giving to every one his due; not sparing those which make most for me, if I find them faulty.

Eth. l. i. c. 6.

Tac. de mor.
Germ.

(6) My method shall be this. I know that those of Rome too full of liberty in framing of the Legends, by mixing Truths with Fictions, and suffering the corrupt and dangerous tales of Hereticks to be wrought in, with both: have given the chief occasion, that this our Saint, with others, have in these latter dayes beene brought unto their triall. First therefore, I shall make a short relation of such unwarrantable tales as are found of him in the Legend, or set abroad by some late Fblers of our owne, or obruded on the Church by Hereticks. That done, I shall report in their owne words, the severall conceits of them, who have endeavoured to perswade us, that there was never such a man as our St. George; and next, of them who have beene diligent to make our Saint an Arian Bishop, a bloody Butcher ¶ cap. 21. Sect. c. (as one calls him) of the true Christians. Not that I shall produce them all, but some onely of the chiefest; some sixe or seven perhaps of each of the opinions; Et magna partium momenta, the founders and abettours. Their arguments, which are not many, I shall quickly answer; proceeding so to such records as yeeld most testimony to our Saint: the time and manner of his death, the honour done unto his Reliques, to his memory; not only by the Church, but by the greatest Kings and Princes of the Christian world. In which, I shall adhere especially to the plaine words and meanings of those Authors whose authorities I urge; not wresting them aside, or stopping of their mouths, when they speake not to my purpose. My study is for truth, not faction. And if at any time, which is but seldome, I shall take liberty to use conjectures in the explaining of some passage which is obscure and difficult, and otherwise might give occasion of exception; I hope it will be said, that I am only ευπαρ, ingenuously bold; not παυαρ, audaciously presumptuous.

(7) It may be possible, that there are yet some things omitted in this following Discourse, which might add further

ther lustre to the cause, and vindicate Saint Georges honour with the more applause and satisfaction ; yet I must say withall, that there is nothing wanting in it, which either my memory could prompt unto me, or which my diligent enquiry into all kinde of Authors, whom I thought likely to afford me any helps, might possibly be met with. Nor have I onely for the perfecting of this worke, made further search into the monuments of antiquity, those specially of the Easterne Churches ; which formerly I had not seene : but upon conference with the learned, and by such helps, which I acknowledge as occasion is to have had from them, I have corrected and enlarged it. Enlarged it with some chapters, many severall sections, sundry particular allegations out of divers Authors, both of the Greeke Churches, and the Churches Protestant. Corrected it, as in the practicke part, touching the order of the Garter ; which I have rectified out of the Registers and Records of the noble order : so in some others of the story, in which I eyther had not cleerely expressed my selfe, or was mistaken in my Authors. Nor doe I thinke it a dishonour to differ somewhat, when I see a reason for it, from that which I affirm'd before. Rather I joy, that upon more enquiry, and second cogitations, which are alwayes better ; I have in any thing, come neerer to the truth, then before I was. My study, as I sayd, is for truth, not faction : nor would I willingly, on any by-respect whatever, offer the least offence unto sacred verity. Besides, falling upon an argument, which none before me, that I know, had undertaken : it might well be, that some thing did come from mee, rather as offers at the truth, then for truth it selfe. A matter ordinary in the best, and most modest Writers : of which last ranke I doe desire to be accounted. Adde hereunto, that my performance, why I know not, hath met with many adversaries, & some I have encountred withall my selfe ; who have endeavored, what they could against it. And therefore I had reason, both to assure the cause, and fortifie my selfe, in the best manner that I could : as well by the assistance of such further testimonies, which now serve for succours, as by a stronger bearing downe of that opposition, which I conceive most likely to be made against us. These are the motives, why wee adventured on a new Edition of this Worke, and sent it forth a second time into the world, augmented and corrected. If the time spent heerein, (as truly second births of this kinde and quality, are no lesse painfull than the first) be eyther profit to the Reader, or any way advantage unto sacred truth: it is not lost unto my selfe. Non solum nobis nati sumus. I was not brought into the world, for mine own sake onely. The end of my creation, was to doe service unto God, and to his holy Church, & unto my Prince: which severall obligations, I have endeavored to discharge, I mean in part, by this performance.

(8) The whole Worke therefore, as it is consecrated next under GOD, unto the service of his most Excellent Majestie, and of this flourishing Church of the which wee are, both which are principally interessed in this cause, by reason of the honours which they have conferred upon our Martyr: so from them principally I expect my censure: yet so, that I submit it also, to the censure of all wise, and learned and religious men, which shall hap to read it, whom I beseech, with all respective reuerence, to pardon such mistakes, if there bee any, which their more able knowledge shall discover to them: and though they thinke not fit to approve the Worke, to allow my purpose. Those selfe conceited ones, which are so stiffe and peremptory in their new conceits; and whose opinions hang upon anothers sleewe, not to be taken off with reason: I leave unto the jolly humour of their singularities. Against such men, I am resolved to entertaine the resolution of Symonides, as hee hath thus expressed it:

Τὴν αὐτὴν φρένα τίρπης, δυσλεχίων ὃ πολίτων,
Ἄλλος τις σὲ κακῶς, ἄλλος ἀμείνον ἐρεῖ.

Soule, be at rest: though some offended be,
And speake thee foule; others will cherish thee.

To conclude therefore, my selfe, and whatsoever hath beene done by me in this present Argument; I submit willingly, as I sayd before, unto all wise, and learned, and religious men; and to them onely. As for the rest, Odi profanum vulgus & arceo.

CHAP.

CHAP. I.

(1) Three kinds of Imposture. (2) The first founder of the Legendary or fabulous Histories. (3) Iacobus de Voragine, the Author of the Golden Legend : his time and quality. (4) His fiction of St. Georges killing of the Dragon. (5) The remainder of that Legend continued out of Ovid. (6) The fable of Saint Georges Birth in England : (7) Poetically countenanced by Edm. Spencer. (8) The Legend of the Dragon rejected by the learned Romanists. (9) Defended by Geo. Wicelius. (10) What may be alleaged in defence thereof. (11) The Sceneremov'd from Astrict into Asia.

(1)

IR Francis Bacon, created afterwards Lord Verulam, and Vicount St. Albons, in his Religious Essayes, thus informes us. There “ are, (saith he) three formes of speaking, “ which are, as it were, the stile and phrase “ of imposture. By the first kind of which,

 “ the capacity and wit of man, is fetter’d
 “ and intangled ; by the second, it is trayned on, and invei“ gled ; and by the third, astonish’d and enchanted. The “ first of these, he attributes, (I will not say how justly) un“ to the School-men : the last, to those which trade in my“ steries and parables. The second is, of them, who out of “ the vanity of their wit, (as Church-Poets) doe make and “ devise all variety of Tales, Stories, and examples ; whereby “ mens mindes may be led into beleefe : from whence grow
 “ the Legends, and the infinite and fabulous inventions and “ dreames of the ancient Hereticke. So that we see two “ severall diseases, or corruptions of Story rather, to proceed
 “ from one and the same Fountaine, Vanity of Wit ; though “ after, they have divers ends, and different purposes : the pur“ pose of the Legend, being to advance the reputation of the “ Saint ; the project of the Hereticke, to make the Saint a countenance and Patron to his cause. With each of these diseases, the Story of our Saints, and many others also of that glorious Company have beene deeply tainted: the Heretickes eyther absolutely forging whole tales of them; or els inserting such passages into their Histories, as might persuade the world to thinke them of their party: the others labouring so to describe their lives and passions, as might procure unto their shrines, a greater measure of Devotion, and attendance. The one of these, an effect onely of a superstitious Piety; the other, a designe of a malicious cunning.

(2) And first beginning with the Legendaries, which of these two Impostors are the last in time, and least in danger, they tooke beginning in these Churches of the West, from one Peter, surnamed Comestor: the Authour, as his friends doe stile him, and as himselfe inscribe's his worke, of the Scholasticall History. But they which looke upon his Writings with the eye of judgement, and not of blind Affection, have thought it fitter to bestow upon him that Character, which I have somewhere read of Horatius: and to intitle him, Fabulosa Historia Patrum, the Father and Originall of all those fabulous Tales and Legends; which, at this day, are so frequent in the Roman Church. Sure I am, that Bellarmino hath given him this Censure, that he inserted into the sacred Stories of the Bible, many things out of vulgar glosses, and prophane Authors; not rarely mingling with it uncertaine and unprofitable Fables. Scriptis autem (saith he) inferens verbis sacris multa ex glossis, & ex prophanis Autoribus; & non raro admiscens incertas Historias. Hee liv'd and writ about the yeare 1150. about the same time with Gratian, and Peter Lombard, the Master of the Sentences. So neere about a time, that some, I cannot say how warrantably, have made them brothers: all sonnes of the same mother, though of divers fathers. This I am sure, that they are generally accounted as the Authors of three kinds of study; new in the reckoning of those times: Gratian, (a Petrus) being reputed the founder of the Canons; Petrus Comestor, of the Legendaries; and Peter Lombard of the Schoolmen.

De Script. Eccl.

Peter too

(3) The

(3) The father of the Legendaries in the Western Churches, being thus found out; it is not to be doubted, but that he had a fruitfull issue, in an age so prone to those devices. Of these, the man of greatest Fame, was James Archbishop of Genoa in Italy; a native of that Country: his surname, De Voragine, so call'd in the opinion of Helvicus, quasi Vorago esset Bibliorum, propter citabras allegaciones; because he was so great a Student in the Holy Scriptures, so frequent in quotations. Philippus Bergomensis, and Vossius since him, will rather have it to be de Voragine, a little Village in the territory of Genoa, the place of his Nativity. Orcus, in his Nomenclator, placeth him, ad Annum 1278. Helvicus, in the yeere 1280. And Bergomensis ten yeeres after, Anno 1290. None of them differing from the truth, though from themselves. The last of these, saith that he was a man of a faire esteeme; & moribus, & dignitate, magno precio; and not so onely, but Theologus, & declamator egregius; one that had got the commendation both of Eloquence and Learning. Vossius makes him also in his last Booke, de Latinis Historicis, to be the first Translatour of the Bible, into the Italian language. His workes were many, and of good opinion in the Church: but none of equall credit with the History, which he collected of the lives of Saints. Himselfe intituleth it, Historia Lombardica: call'd by the people, for the excellency thereof, (as it was then conceiv'd) the Golden Legend. A booke in the esteeme and judgement of those times, of high desert: however now the learned Papists have rejected it with shame enough. There is (saith Master Harding in his Desection L. 4. ad pag. 131) an old Moath-eaten booke, wherein Saints lives are sayd to be contain'd; certaine it is, that among some true stories, are many vaine fables written. And Ludov. Vives De Tradend. give's him this censure for a farewell, that he was homo fer-discepl. i. a. rei oris, plumbei Cordis; some also adde, Animi certe parum prudentis & severi; a man of little wit, and lesse judgement, a leaden heart, and a brazen forehead. Which heavy censure, I doe verily perswade my selfe, the man deserve's not; as being, for the times in the which hee lived, both learned and industrious.

Vid cap. 5. Sect.
9. 10.

(4) Of him, and of his Legend, more heereafter: and for the present, let us looke upon him, in his so memorated Story of St. George, and of the Dragon. He begins it thus. Georgius Tribunus, genere Cappadox, pervenit quadam vice in Provinciam Lybie, in civitatem qua dicitur Silena: juxta quam Civitatem erat stagnum instar Maris, in quo Draco pestifer latitabat; statq; suo ad muros civitatis accedens, omnes inficiebat: quapropter compulsi cives, duas oves quotidie sibi dabant ut ejus furorem sedarent. Cum ergo jam oves pene deficerent, into consilia ovem cum adjuncto homine tribuebant. Cum igitur sorte omnium filij & filia consumpti essent, quadam vice, filia Regis unica, sorte est deprehensa, & Draconi adjudicata, &c. St. George of "Cappadocia, a Colonnell or a Tribune of the Soldiers, came "on a time unto the Countrey of Lybia, and to the city of "Silena. (perhaps mistaken for Siene, a great towne of Egypt.) Neere to this towne, there was a lake, like a sea for "bignesse, and in that lake a deadly Dragon: which com- "ming neere the walles did with his poisonous breath ex- "ceedingly both infect and annoy the City, and all the "Country round about him. The people thereupon were "in a manner forced, to give him every day two sheepe, to "keepe him at a distance, and appease him: At last, when "almost all their sheepe were spent, they were compell'd "to give him every day one sheepe, and therewithall one "man or woman with it, to make up the number. And in "the end, when almost all their Sonnes and Daughters were "devoured, at length the cruell and unluckie lot fell upon "the Kings Daughter, her Fathers onely Child, and her "Mothers Darling. Both laboured what they could to di- "vert the mischief; but nothing would content the peo- "ple, those specially whose children had beene made a prey "unto the Monster. When therefore all was fruitlesse, they "brought her forth into the fields, stripped her of all her "rich attire, and finally prepared her for that bloudie sacri- "fice, &c.

(5) So farre the Story, or the Tale rather in the Legend: the rest of it, for the more variety, wee will make bold to borrow out of Ovids Metamorph. who in his Perseus and Andromeda, Andromeda, hath very perfectly express'd the Progress of the fiction. So perfectly, that were the names changed, and the occasion altered; we might with good reason affirm it for the same. But thus the Poet:

*Quam simul ad duras religatam brachia cantes
Vidit Abantiades; nisi quod levis aura capillos Moveras, & tepido manabant lumina fletu, Marmorcum ratum esset opus, &c.*

Metamorph. l. 2.

Whom when the Heroes saw to hard Rocks chain'd,
But that warme teares from charged eye-springs drain'd,
And light winds gently fann'd her fluent haire;
He would have thought her Marble. Ere aware
He fire attracteth, and astonisht by Her beauty, had almost forgot to flie.
Who lighting sayd, O fairest of thy kind,
More worthy of those bands which Lovers binde,
Than these rude gyves; the Land by thee renown'd
Thy name, thy birth declare, and why thus bound.
At first the silent Virgin was afraid
To speake to a man, and modestly had made A vizard of her hands; but they were tied:
And yet abortive teares their Fountaines hide.
Still urg'd, lest she should wrong her innocence,
As if asham'd to utter her offence;
Her Country she discover's, and her name,
Her beauteous mothers confidence and blame, &c.
When, as a Galley with fore-fixed prow
Row'd by the sweats of slaves, the Sea doth plow:
Even so the Monster furroweth with his brest
The foaming Flood, and to the neere Rocke prest;
Not farther distant then a man might sling,
A way-inforcing Bullet from a sling.
Forthwith the youthfull issue of rich showers,
Earth pushing from him, to the blew skie towre's.
And as Love's bird, when she from high furvaic's
A Dragon basking in Apollon's Rayes,

Translated by Geo. Sandys.

Descends

Descend's unscene; and through his neckes blew scales
 (To shun his deadly teeth) her talons nayles:
 So swiftly stoopes high pitch'd Inachides
 Through singing ayre; then on his backe doth seaze;
 And nere his right sinne sheathes his crooked sword
 Vp to the hilt, who deeply wounded, roar'd.
 Now capers in the ayre, now dives below
 The troubled Waves, now turnes upon his foe.
 Much like a chafed Boare, whom eager hounds
 Have at a Bay, and terrific with sounds.
 He with swift wings his greedy chops auoyde's,
 Now with his Pawchion wounds his scaly sides.
 Now his shell-rough-cast backe, now where the taile Ends in a fish, or parts expos'd t'assail.
 A streame mixt with his blood the monster flings
 From his wide throat; which wets his heavy wings.
 Nor longer dares the weary Youth rely On their support. He sees a rock hard by,
 There lights; and holding by the rocks extent,
 His oft-thrust sword into his bowels sent.
 The shore rings with th' applause that fills the sky.
 Then came the aged King and Queene with ioy
 To greet him Conquerour, whom now they call
 The Saviour of their house, and of them all.
 And up the Lady came, freed from her chaines;
 The cause, and recompence of all his paines.

So farre the story out of Ovid. The rest that followes in the Legend, is the baptizing of this King, his redeemed daughter, and his people: which done, and some instructions left among them, for their better progresse in the faith; he commended them to God.

(6) This story of the Dragon, as it was very gracious with the people of those times, so did it quickly spread abroad; and in the close, when others did neglect it, became a principall pageant in that doughty History of the seven Champions. The Author of which Pamphlet, to the no small advancement, as hee takes it, of the English name, hath made

made him to bee borne of English parentage, and of the royall blood. His father, the Lord Albert, Lord high Steward of the Kingdome ; his mother, the daughter to the King ; and his birth-place, Coventry : his first performance being the release of the Lady Sabra, a faire and gracious Princeesse, in his so dangerous an encounter with a burning Dragon, in the Land of Egypt. Mark'd at his birth (forsooth) : with a red bloody Crosse on his right hand ; a golden Garter on his left leg ; and a red Dragon on his breast : but even as soone as borne, conveyed from thence by Caleb, an Enchantresse of the woods, and there I leave him.

Onely I note by the way, that this foolish fellow hath dealt no better with S. Iames, S. Andrew, S. Dunys, and those tutelary Saints, whom hee calls the Champions, then with our S. George. The stories of all which he prosecutes with the same poore fancy ; and therefore must bee reckoned a discredit unto all, or unto none.

(7) To this Relation of his being borne of English Parentage, our admir'd Spencer, although Poetically, doth seeme to give some countenance : where hee brings in his holy Hermite, heavenly Contemplation, thus laying to S. George, the Red-crosse Knights, his Parentage and Country.

65

*I met (quoth he) thou spring'st from ancient race
Of Saxon Kings, which have with mighty hand,
And many bloody battels fought in place,
High rear'd their royall Thrones in Brittain land ;
And vanquish'd them unable to withstand,
From thence a Fayry thee unmeeting rest,
There as thou slepst in tender swadling band:
And her base Elfin brood, there for thee left,
Such men do Changelings call, so chang'd by Fayries the best.*

Fayry. Q. 4. l.
cant. 10.

66

*Thence for thee brought into this Fayry Land,
And in an heaped furrow did thee hide,
Where thee a Ploughman all unmeeting found,*

At

As he his toilsome teame that way did guide;
 And brought thee up in Ploughmans state to bide, Whereof Georgos he thee gave to name:
 Till prickt with courage, and thy forces pride,
 To Fayry Court thou cam'st to seeke for fame;
 And prove thy puissant armes, as seemes thee best became.

Summa Histor.
part. 1. iii. 8.
sect. 23.

(8) But to returne againe unto the Legend, according as in those times it was commonly receiv'd; we have it almost word for word in Antoninus Florentinus. Who though in other of his stories, hee is conceiv'd to give too much credit to popular reports: in this particular he hath play'd the part of a Relateur onely, not an approover of the Fable. For in the Close he tels us, that this the Legend of St. George, is reckoned by Gelasius, inter apocryphas scripturas; for many passages therein which may well bee doubted, ut de Dracone interfecto, & filia Regis per eum liberata; &c. as for example, this his encounter with the Dragon. Much also to this purpose Raphael Volateran, who florished in the time of Pope Iulio the second, (anno viz. 1506.) to whom his worke is dedicated. S. Georgius Martyr, genere Cappadox, Tribunus Militum sub Diocletiano merebat. Draconem maximum in Africa exercitum terrestrem, solus Deo frater dicitur interemisse: quæ tamen Historia in Niceno Concilio, inter apocrypha est habitæ. St. George the Martyr, by birth a Cappadocian, was under Diocletian one of the Tribunes of the Souldiers. It is reported of him, that hee killed a great and dreadfull Dragon in the Land of Africa: which story, notwithstanding, is in the Nicene Councell (he means the Canon of Gelasius, made in a Councell of 72 Bishops) reputed as Apocryphall. Where wee may note, that onely his so memorated conflict with the Dragon, in his opinion, is exploded; but not his Martyrdome, or being. Those of the Romish party which have lived since then, have totally abandoned this invention of the Dragon, and spunged it also out of the Liturgies of the Church, where before it was.

(9) Onely Wicelius, of as many as I have seene, endeavours

vours to make good the tale, by reason. A man of good abilities in Learning, and as we may conjecture by his writings, no furious Papist: however it hath pleased Baleus, to give him that unworthy title, of Papisticus adulator, a Po- Cent. 3.6.38. pish parasite. He in his Hagiographie, or History of the Saints, written, as it appears by his Epistle Ded. in the yeere 1541. doth argue thus: Gentilis as persuasa subnlis poe- riele, credidit quicquid fingebatur de tanto Marathronio, & a- pro Caledonio, bellis terra exitiosissimis. Verum quando nos om- nipotentie divina fortiter gesta omnia religiosè adscribimus; nil erit absurdum, Draconem Lybicum abs Deo per dextram (bri- fiani equis à medio sublatum, ne plus damni inferret miseris mortalibus. The Gentiles (sayth hee) induced thereunto In Georgio. by poetickall fictions onely, did willingly beleevè the sto- ries told unto them, of the Caledonian Boare, destroyed by Meleager; and of the Marathronian Bull, which was slain by Hercules. What error is it then, or what absurdity, if we which attribute all noble Acts unto the mighty hand of God; if wee (I say) beleevè that God destroyed this Lybian Dragon, by the valour of a Christian Champion? So he. His argument, you see, is drawne a posse Dei, from the power of God, which no man questiond; and wherein the obstinelsse is mistaken; the scruple being, not what might possibly be done by God; in extent of power; but what was done in truth of story.

(10) And truly were there no more in it but the killing of a Dragon, the story were not either to bee discredited or cast off; nor need Micellus have recourse unto Gods omni- potency, to make good the action. For that in times be- fore us, there have beene Dragons, Serpentine creatures of excessive bulke, and no lesse danger, is a thing evident in the best writers. Strabo relates it out of Possidonius, that a Lib. 16. dead Serpent was once found in Syria, of that wondrous bignesse, that two horsemen, enastipades megastros, standing of each side of it, could not see one another. And our owne Chronicles, to goe no further, make mention, some- where, of a Dragon of almost incredible greatnesse, found at Hake-Norras, not farre from Q. w. n. besides, what Herve- den.

Annal. part. prior. don hath reported de serpentibus in Suffexia visis, magna cum admiratione, of serpents scene in Suffex, to the great astonishment of the people. Such creatures as they are, and have beene in being, in most places; so in Africa especially, there where S. George is said to have killed the Dragon. Africa semper aliquid appertat novi, had reference especially to that variety of monsters which it continually afforded. Of Aegypt in particular, we are well assured, that it was fruitful of such creatures; and of all other parts thereof, those which were neereſt to Nile, upon whose banks Syene stood, once a Roman Garrison; and well may be that Syene mentioned in the Legendary. As evident it also is, that Serpents of the greatest size, have beene quelled and vanquished. Livy relates of Regulus in the epitome of the eighth booke of his second Decad (which is all that is left of it) Serpentem portentosa magnitudinis in Africa, cum maxima militum clade, interemisse, that hee destroyed in Africa a Serpent of a monstrous hugeness, though with great slaughter of his soldiers. What hath beene done by private persons in this kinde, wee may see once for all, in that story of Pausanias; who tells us, that a monstrous Dragon plaguing the City of the Thespians in Boeotia, λυμανεμεν τε καὶ πόλιν τότε αὐτοῖς ὀφειλοντο, as that Author hath it, was at the last destroyed by one Cleostratus, though hee himselfe died also in the encounter with the monster. Now that which hath beene done at any one time by ordinary men and meanes, why may it not againe, by like men and meanes, be done also at another? Why might not George a souldier both of magnanimity and discretion, Gods loue and goodnesse concurring with him in the act, bee said to kill a Dragon, a serpentine creature of great bulke and danger. S. George, though borne in Cappadace, was brought up in Palestine, the neereſt Country unto Aegypt, where the scene is laid of this great action, and being, as his story relates, a souldier of speciall note under Diocletian, may well bee thought to have done service in Syene, then a Roman Garrison. This, and much more then this, might bee alledged in the defence of this particular, were there no more in it then the killing of a Dragon; which is, as hath beene shewne, both feasible and ordinary. But take it with the circumstances wherewithall it is apparrellled in the Legend, the whole narration joyntly as it lieth together, and we must leave the patronage thereof to him who first committed it to writing. What we conceive hereof, we shall shew anon, in our 4 Chapter.

In Boeotia.

(11) And with those circumstances haue we spoken of it hitherto, as, of an African, or Lybian Dragon, for so it is reported in the Legend, and in those other Authors whose testimonies we have used: but wee must now remove our Scene, and carry the whole story with us into Asia. How this was done, or by what means, I am not able to determine: unlesse perhaps those Spirits, (for I dare not call them Angels) which translated the dwelling house of the blessed Virgin, out of Asia into Europe; to make some satisfaction for that injury, conveyed the story of this Dragon, out of Africk into Asia. Sure I am, that they of Syria and Palestine, are very confident, that the Dragon was their Country-man; and that St. George encountred him in the Plaines of Libanus, neere unto Berytus, now Barutti, a chief Towne of Syro-Phoenicia. Thus witnesseth Ludov. Patrius, in the first booke of his owne Travels, speaking of this Berytus. Nihil ibi memoratu dignum prater id quod incolae memorant, locum vix variopato excessum, squalentemque ubi antumant D. Georgium Regis filium ab immanissimo Dracone assertum esse, &c. Wee found there nothing worthy note, but an "old ruinous Ghappell, buik in the place, where, as they say, "St. George receiv'd the Kings Daughter, out of the very "jaws of a dreadfull Dragon. So he, and he begun his journey anno 1504. or thereabouts, during the Raigne of Emmanuel King of Portugal; to whom at his returne to Lisbone, he addressed himselfe. Adrichomius in his Description of the holy Land, anno 1589. goeth more particularly to work, and makes the place to be, as before we sayd, the Fields of Libanus, betweene the Rivers of Zidon and Adonis. Where in his Map of Aser, we have the pictures of the Dragon and the Knight, in a fearefull skirmish: and in his text hee tells us, that the place is by the Natives call'd by the name of Cappadocia.

Nam. 9.

Page 68

Cappadocia (it being, we must thinke, the birth-place of St. George's glories:) and that St. George there kill'd the Dragon. In hoc loco, qui ab incolis Cappadocia appellatur, non longe a Beryta, memorant inclitum Christi militem D. Georgium, Regis filium, &c. as he there hath it. In memory of which exploit, there was (say they) a Castle, and an Oratory, builde after in the same place, being consecrated to Saint George: and the whole Countrey thereabouts, to this day call'd St. George's Valley. If this suffice not for the removing of it into Asia, we may read Mr. Selden's notes on the Poly-Olbion, that he is pictured in his Knightly forme at Beryta a "City of Cyprus (mistaken in the print for Syria) with a "Dragon under him, and a yong Mayd kneeling by him. And thereupon, no doubt, the people make themselves believe, that the great Dragon was kill'd within their borders: even as to justifie the sale of our Sir Bevis, and his Page the Giant Ascapart; the people of Southampton, have placed their portraytures upon their gate. See more of this, Part 2. chap. 1. §. 6.

But of the Legend, and those unwarrantable Fables thence arising, we have spoke inough. Only, me thinke, this their exact and punctuall pointing out the place, of this great duell, brings in my mind, what I have somewhere read of the blind Senatour Montanus. Who being once at Supper with the Emperour Tiberius, highly commended the great Mullet, which hee heard say, was set before them on the Table; and shewed how faire it was, how fat, how it fill'd the Charger, how it lay; and ever as he spake, he turned his face, and pointed with his finger to the higher end of the Table; whereas indeed, the Mullet was a great deals below him.

CHAP.

CHAP. II.

(1) Of Hereticks and their originall (2) Their early promises to corrupt the Gospell. (3) Their arts to countenance their cause. (4) Their plots discovered, and condemned by Councils, and by Fathers. (5) The injury done by Hereticks unto the History of Saint George. (6) The Arians convicted of fraud and forgery. (7) Saint Athanasius accused for Magick by the Arians. (8) Of Alexandra, Dioclesians wife in the common Legend. (9) The indiscretion of some Church-Historians, in their choice of Argument.

(I)

Have now done with the first kinde of Imposture, conversant about the History and lives of Saints : the last, as before I sayd, in time, and the least, in danger. That only did intend, to dispose the minde to enter-tayne ungrounded Fables, doubtfull traditions, and unwarrantable fictions, whereby it might be rais'd unto a constant liking of those parties, commended to it in those Fables, fictions, and traditions. But this that followes, endeavours principally to infect the understanding ; and to prepare the will, to countenance that cause which themselves support : infusing into every part and Section of their writings, some secret venome, which the unheedfull Reader may swallow unawares. That, (as I sayd before) an effect onely of superstitious Piety : but this, a treacherous designe of malicious cunning. A cunning even as old as Heresie it selfe : Heresie, I meane, as now wee take the word, for a malicious and stubborne opposition to the truth, delivered to us in the Gospell. I say, as now wee take the word, for if we take it, accordingly as it hath beene used in ancient Authors, wee have not onely Heresies in Christianity,

D

but

Epist. ad Tral.

but even in Judaisme, in the Law of Mahomet, and in Philosophy both naturall and morall : but take it as it is at this time used, and we referre the first originall thereof, to Simon Magnus, τὸ μεγάλων δαβόλων ἡγούμενος the first begotten of the Divel, as Ignatius calls him. Out of his mouth came those unclean and filthy spirits : liketo the Frogs in the Apocal. which came out of the mouth of the Dragon, and out of the mouth of the Beast, and out of the mouth of the false Prophets : even the spirits of Devils working miracles.

Mat. 42.

Luz. 4. 35.

(2) No sooner came this τὸ θυμὸν αὐτοῦ, ἐξεδύνων, this Generation of Vipers forth into the world ; but they presently began to doe the will of him that sent them : making as many as they could, which went upright in the way of Gods Commandements ; at first to halt and stagger betweene two opinions ; and at the last, to forsake the living God, and turne to Baal. The Divel when he was his own agent, in his attempt to seduce our Saviour ; assaulted him with Scripture, saying, It is written : and these his children must needs also have a Scriptum est, the better to set off and relish their temptations. To further which designe, they did both corrupt that Scripture, which they had amongst them, and devise a new. In their attempts to corrupt the Scripture, they proceeded somewhat leisurely ; yet with more haste, as the saying is, than with good speed : for such a vigilante eye the watchmen of the Church did keepe upon them, that they were instantly discovered. Marcion, as Epiphanius tells us, had alter'd and perverted some passages of holy Writ ; but all observ'd by that good Father. So had the Arians corrupted in one place the Gospel of Saint Iohn, to make it serve their purpose : but this was noted (as himselfe informes us) and restor'd by Saint Ambrose. In their designes to devise new Scripture, they began more early, but with like successe : so early and so impudently, that they obtruded their most damnable inventions upon the Church ; during the names both of the Prophets and Apostles. So sayth S. Austin generally, Multa sub nominibus Prophetarum, & recitatione sub nominibus Apostolorum, ab hereticis proferri, quæ omnia sub nomine Apocryphorum, &c. Of these Apocryphall writings, writings, and the like then extant, Pope Leo was a great detectour : by whom they were not onely forbidden to bee read, but utterly abolished, and adjudged also to the fire. Apocrypha Scriptura, quæ sub nomine Apostolorum, multarum habent semina falsitatis, non solum interdicienda, sed etiam penitus auferenda, atque ignibus tradenda. So he, Canon, 15. ep. 91. of Crabbes edition. The reason which Pope Leo gives, will serve for all. Because (saith he) however they did seeme to have a shew of piety ; nunquam tamen vacua sunt venenis, they were full of venom : and by their sic insinuations did at last effect, ut mirabilium narrationes seductos laqueis cuiuscuq; erroris involvant ; That by the miracles there related, they did involve the Readers, in many great and dangerous errors. Afterwards Pope Gelasius drew up a Catalogue of the most of them ; some which did personate the Patriarchs, and some the Prophets, and Apostles : as also divers which had put in writing the actions of some Saints, and passions of some Martyrs, therby to countenance and advance that cause which themselves supported. Which having severally and particularly reckoned up, hee brands them as Apocryphall.

(3) Nor were these ancient Heretickes excellent onely in their stratagems to deprave and falsifie the Scriptures, but also in those more neat and subtile projects, which they had among them, to countenance and enlarge their cause. For certainly we may affirme it of the Heretickes, that as they are the children of this World ; so they are wiser, in their ways, than the children of Light. A cleare example of which Aphorisme, wee have in those of the Arian Faction ; which holding longer, than any other of that dangerous nature in the Church, could not but bee supported with a greater cunning. Of this kinde was their accusing of their Contraries, of Magicks, and Sabellianisme ; their strict Confederacies and Combinations, to ruine those that held against them ; their artificiall plots to draw on others, to maintain their party ; their curious choyce of instruments, whereby to compasse their intents. Thus did they joyne together, in the severall Councils of Antioch, and Tyre ; to destroy

Socrat. Hist. Eccl.
lib. 1. cap. 19.

1b cap. ult.

Lib. II c. 5.

Advers. gent.
lib. prim.

the Orthodox Professours. Thus did they winne upon Constantia (a woman of no kindred with her name) by one of speciall sanctity in the appearance; and by her meanes, prevail'd, in fine, upon the noble nature of her Brother Constantino. And thus by sending Poast the same engine, which had wrought upon that Lady, to signifie the Emperours death unto the eldest of his Sonnes; and to deliver him his Fathers Testament, which was committed to their trust: they did not only worke upon him to support their cause; but to stickle in it. So true is that of Caesar, (although it may be truly verified of him and his:) Flareticorum diligentiam & industriam mirari satis non queo. Omnia quippe illi suscipi, deq; misceri, ut viri pietate insignes, praesertim si Reges & Imperatores sint, ipsorum partes fuisse videantur.

(4.) But to proceed. What luck soever the Heretickes of former ages had in their plots and stratagems, upon great persons; they found it otherwise in such other of their courses as came within the cognisance and censure of the Church. They had as wee have said already, divulg'd their damnable errors under the names of the Apostles; but this discovered, and their writings judg'd unto the fire by Leo. The Manichees had many dreames, and devilish fancies of their owne, which they imputed also to some one or other of those blessed Spirits: but this detected by St. Austin. Ipsi autem (viz. Manichei) legunt Scripturas apocryphas, quas etiam incorruptissimas esse dicunt, &c. So hee in his discourse against Adimantum. Nor did they only labour to corrupt the Doctrine of the Church; but the Stories also of those times, and of the former, were made to speake such language as might bee most available unto their cause and purpose. And not so onely, but by confounding the false Legends of their partizans, with such as had beene Saints indeed, they gave occasion to the Church, that either by suppressing of their Stories, the memory of the holy Martyrs must be ruin'd with them; or else out of a pious care to preserve the one, the memory of the other might likewise be continued. This by Arnobius was complained of even in the beginning, ut viz. malevolentia demonum, & similia.

milium his hominibus, that by the malice of the Devill and his instruments, the acts and monuments of the Church were depraved and falsified; some passages put in, some razed out, and others altered. The end of all, ut & prudentium tardarent fidem, & gestorum corrumpere auctoritatem, both to defraud those acts of their due authority, and make the wiser sort of men unapt to credit or beleve them. But herein their device miscarried also: the Fathers of the Church, distinguishing as well as possibly they could, the Tares and Wheat; gathered the one into their Barns, and left the other to the mercy of the flames. Thus the sixth Synode holden in the yeere 680. at Constantinople. Τὸ Ἰδὲ; καὶ ἡ ἐκ. 68.

ὁ ἀληθὴς ἐξ ὧν ἀμνημονεῖται μάρτυρία, ὅς αἱ τοῦ τοῦ χριστοῦ μάρτυρες ἀπὸ μάρτυρων, καὶ πρὸς ἀποστολὴν ἐκδόσαντο τοῦ ἀκούσας, καὶ ἐκ βαλυσίας ἀμαρτωλῶν ἀποκρίσαντο, ἀλλὰ ταῦτα καὶ πλεονέχουσι.

Τὸς ὅ τὰ ταῦτα παρὰ δεξιόθεν, ἃ αἱ ἀληθεῖς τούτοις προσέχονται, ἀναμαρτυροῦν. Viz. The holy Synode doth ordaine, that those false Martyrologies which have been written by the enemies of our Religion, bee no more publish'd in the Churches; but that they bee delivered over to the fire, as dangerous writings, which disgrace the Saints of G O D, and lead men over either to Infidelity or Incredulity. And as for those which either entertaine them, or conceive them to bee true, let them be Anathema. So farre the Synod.

(5) We have beene busied all this while, in laying our foundation: It is now time that we proceed unto the building. A matter with the which I could not well go forward, till I had shewne in generall how diligent the Hereticks of all ages; and in particular the Arians have alwayes beene in gaining credit to their cause. Of which a clearer instance cannot easily be found, than their depraving of the story of our blessed Saint, St. George the Martyr; by mingling with it, some passages of special note, occurring in the life of an Arian Bishop of that name, their George of Alexandria. A thing that wee affirme not casually and upon conjecture, but by such arguments as we conceive are able to evict it. For in a Council of 73 Bishops held in Rome, under Pope Gelasius p. 993.

*Concil. rom. l. c.
dis. Pet. Crabbe
p. 993.*

(hee began his Popedome in the yeere 492.) it was complained, that the Acts and Monuments of many of the holy Martyrs, ab infidelibus. aut dicta superflue, aut minus apte scripta esse putantur, quam rei ordo postulat; were thought to have beene writ by Hereticks or misbelievers, with lesse integrity then so great a businesse did require. And in particular, that the sufferings of one Quiriacus and his mother Iulitta, of George, and divers others, had beene writ by Hereticks. Quiriaci enjodana & Iulitta matris ejus, Georgij, item aliorumque hujusmodi passionis ab hereticis compositas perhiberi. Of all which histories, both of the latter which particularly are expressed, and of the others intimated at large, and in generall termes, it was then resolved, that they were not to be read in Churches: ne vel levius subsannando occasio oriretur, that so there be no occasion of contempt and laughter. How farre this reacheth to the Arians, we shall see hereafter: having first made an answer to an affirmation of Baronius in this present businesse, which some helieving to be true, may be else misguided.

Martyrol cap. 3

L. 3. de SS. c. 11.

(6) For he affirmes it for a certaine, that the Arians are not to be charged with this accusation. Omnis suspicio (saith he) de Arianorum perfidia tollitur, ut ab is vis aliqua in illa martyrum sit allata. But I must aske for further proofs then Baronius his word, having so often found them faulty in the same kinde: Saint Ambrose layeth it to their charge, that they had razed this passage in Saint Iobus Gospel, quoniam Deus est spiritus, out of their Bibles: and not their owne only, sed etiam de Ecclesia codicibus, out of the Bibles of the Churches. Shall we conceive, that those who durst adventure to deprave the Scriptures, would stick at the corrupting of the Acts of the blessed Martyrs! The Arians, as they gave it out, that all the Martyrs which had suffered in the former persecutions, died in the faith which they professed: so did they also beare their Proselyts in hand, that they maintained no other doctrine then that delivered in the Scriptures: and therefore might as well corrupt the one, as deprave the other. The rather, because what they affirm'd of the former Martyrs, and other Doctors of the Church, proved:

ved in the end a very bragge, as indeed it was. For when the Emperour Theodosius had called the Arians before him, ^{secret. hist. l. 53} as unto a conference, and suddenly demanded what con- ^{cap. 10.} ceit they had of the ancient fathers, ^{ὅς} ἦν πρὸς τὸ διαρρίσσειν, ^{Sozom. l. 7, c. 12.} which lived and wrot before the controversies moved: they made reply, that they esteem'd them very highly. But when hee asked them (according as Novatian by the directions of Sisinnius had before advised him) εἰ τῆς πλῆθους ἀξιοποιεῖν μάρτυρι, &c. if they would stand unto their judgement, they grew distracted, and confounded, and did in fine refuse the offer. Nay which is more, the writings of those holy Confessors and Martyrs which were gone before them, they were found to falsifie, to makethem serviceable to the cause. This proved by Athanasius, who charg- ^{De Sentent. Di-} eth them in generall, that having fallen from the foundati- ^{ons contra Ari-} on of the Prophets and Apostles, and knowing not where- ^{anos prope fi-} on to fasten, κατὰ ψεύδεσιν λοιπὸν ἦν πατέρων, they had belied ^{nem.} and falsified the ancient Fathers. And in particular, that they had wrested to their purpose, a passage in the writing of Dionysius, once Bishop of the Church of Alexandria; καὶ ^{Jb. in initio} οὕτως ἐμύθεον αὐτὸν καὶ ἐμύθεον λοιπὸν ῥηδοῦν, and so traduced him as a Patron of the Arian heresie. The same Saint Athanasius tells us, in his Apology ad Constantium, that they had coun- ^{Edit. gr. lat. pag.} terfeited his hand-writing, καὶ χαλμάτα τοῖς ἡμετέροις ὁμοία, &c. ^{680.} and contrived a letter in his character, by which they drew the Emperour into conceit that he stood ill affected both to his government and person. As also, that in their missives or encyclicall Epistles to the Prelates of divers Churches, wherein they had most bitterly inveighed against him, they ^{Apol. 2. p. 738.} had subscribed the names of many the Egyptian Bishops, as if they also had accused him. Whereas indeed they were the Bishops of the faction of Meletius, a crue of schismaticks, and enemies unto the Church; ἦσαν δὲ ἐπὶ ἐκ ἡμῶν ἱσμεν οἱ ῥηδόντες· ἀλλὰ Μελετιανοὶ οἱ δεισχηματικοί, &c. as themselves there testifie. And to conclude, that they had also forged let- ^{ib. p. 762.} ters in the names of Aselepius & Marcellus, both of them Orthodox professors; ἵνα καὶ βασιλέα καὶ πᾶν κληρὸν, to instigate the Prince against them. I could yet instance further in Lucianus Bishop of Nicomedia, an orthodox and godly Prelate, whom they abused in the same manner as they had done Dionysius. But what need more be said? They that depraved the Scriptures, belied the Fathers; they that did counterfet the hands of some, and the names of others; & all to countenance their cause: shall we conceive they would be sparing of the Martyrs? or that they would not as well corrupt their stories, as falsifie their writings? Baronius must bring better prooffe, before I shall beleve either himselfe, or any that reliech upon him. This I am sure of, that Baronius herein contradicts himselfe and his owne defenses. For where Eusebius, and out of him Socrates and others, report that Constantine was baptized at Nicomedia, and not at Rome, as the great Cardinall would have it; he tels us that the Arians did corrupt the story, ut videtur hominum (hee means Eusebius Pamphilus) Arianis heresi imbutum, pariter imbutisse cum impietate dolos, ad concinnanda mendacia. Sure I am also that Nicophorus, who herein follows the tradition of the Church of Rome, affirms it, that Arians in Ægypte, did with a devillish purpose raise that rumour; ut non periret incertum, ut non periret, ut non periret, that so that Emperour might bee of their opinion: Therefore the Arians not so free from forgery, if that Baronius may bee iudge on this occasion, as in the former place Baronius himselfe would have them. Whether that Constantine was baptized at Rome, or not, it matters not unto this purpose. Let it suffice, Baronius thought the Arians to be false and forgers, for so reporting it.

(7) In the next place we must consider, whether the Arians are not guilty in like manner, in this particular of Saint George, and the corrupting of his story. One speciall circumstance or passage, which may perswade us that they were, is that which is retayned still in the Common Legends, touching a notable Conjuror or Magitian, and his attempts to make away by poyson, our blessed Martyr. His name was Athanasius; and his undertaking this, according as we have it in Vincenius. Tunc videtur Dacianus, quod cum panis superare non posset, diu quæsit, & tandem invenit eundem Mago, dixit, Christiani magicis artibus tormenta inducant. Respondit Athanasius Magnus, si artes ejus superare conquire, Amal. ad An.

324. n. 43.

Nic. l. 7. cap. 35.

thought to be opted bish. l. 12.

cap. 128.

nequivero, rem ero capitis. Educto ergo de carcere, dedit ei calicem plenum veneno, &c. When after severall torments, which had beene cruelly applyed unto Saint George, the President (or Licutenant) Dacianus, saw that hee was not able to make him yeeld to his desires; nor yet deprive him of his life; he call'd unto him a certaine Magitian, whose name was Ashanasius, and sayd unto him, that sure the Christians had some arts to delude their torments; who presently replyed; that he would undertake upon the forfeit of his heade, to overmatch him in his owne cunning. This sayd, and the blessed man of GOD brought out of Prison, he gave unto him, a Mazer full of deadly poyson: which instantly Saint George, (not yet a Martyr) making the signe of the Crosse upon the Cup, dranke off without further danger. Vpon a second experiment in this kinde, but of a more dispatching mixture, the fond Magitian giveth him over, and is accordingly beheaded. This is in brieft the substance of the story in this passage; though somewhat, different from that in Metaphrastes: who maketh this Ashanasius; seeing his labour vaine and fruitlesse, to submit himselfe unto the Martyr, and become his Practises. In both we have a view, (although in cloudes and shadowes, according to the guile of Heretickes) of that great enmity, which was betweene the Arian George, & Athan. & of those practises they used to supplant each other. For in the stories of those times, wee read, how Ashanasius was expelled from Alexandria; the Arian George being made Bishop in his roome: of whose extreme malice to that holy Prelate, there is no question to be made. Its true, that Ashanasius did survive this opposition, however that the Arians, as for the countenance of their cause, they make him the practiser, and George the victor: tell us that Ashanasius did, in fine, submit unto him. The name of Ashanasius Magnus, makes it yet more evident, that this particular passage in the story of our Martyr, is an Arian forgery. Or if the story may be true, as touching the Magitian, which I will not question: yet I am verily perswaded, that the name of Ashanasius might be foysted in by the Arian Heretickes. For who so ignorant in the stories of that age, but knoweth, that Ashanasius, in a Councell held at Tyre, was by the Arian faction accused of Sorcery : as also for the murder of one Arsenius, (whom they had hid out of the way;) and for the cutting off his arme, to use it in his Magickall and divellish Incantations. By means whereof, (however it pleas'd God that Athanasius did marvelously acquit himselfe of both the crimes :) I say by means whereof, this just and innocent man, hath beene traduced even in Heathen Writers also, for a Magitian; and for a man exceeding skilfull in their art of Augurie. Dicebatur n (viz. Athanasius) fatidicarnum sortium fidem, quæve augurale portenderunt alites, scientissimæ calens, aliquoties prædixisse futura. So Ammianus Marcellinus.

*Ammian Mar.
cel. l. 15. c. 8.*

Yam. 3. p. 408.

L. 7. c. 15.

(8) Of the same medley (as I take it) is that of Alexandra, Diocletian's Lady; though in it selfe a little more perplex'd, and not so easie to unriddle. The story is at large reported by Simeon Metaphrastes, towards the end of his "History of St. George; and is this in substance. At such "time as St. George had suffered many of their torments, "and even wearied his Executioners; this Lady Alexandra, (like Pilates wife in the holy Gospell) perswaded "with her Husband, not to have any more to do with that "Righteous man. This drew her into suspition with the "jealous Tyrant, as one that savour'd somewhat of Christi- "anity; and thereupon she was committed. But after, seeing with what a noble constancy, that blessed Saine "continued in the profession of his Faith; shee declared "her selfe a Christian: and was forthwith had out of Prison, to her execution; but died upon the way without "further torments. Our venerable Bede reflects a little on this passage, in his Martyrologie; where (speaking of our Martyr, he tells us this of him, Plurimos etiam ad fidem Christi convertit, simul & Alexandram uxorem ipsius Daciani (for so he calls him) usque ad Martyrium confortavit. Nicephorus Callistus, reports this passage differently from those before him; as viz. that by his earnest prayers to God, he restored the Emperesse Alexandra, which had long beene dead, from the powers of Hell and of the grave. Reginamque Alexandram jam dudum defunctam oratione sola, ab inferis revocavit. What

What this should syme at, is, as before I said, not altogether so casie to unriddle, as the former. I read indeed, that Alexandria one of the principall Cities of the Roman Empire, and at that time the Queene of Africke, revolted from that State (prompted unto it by the factious plots of one Achilles) at the first entrance of Diocletian on the Throne. For which, as many of the chiefest of them were deservedly put to death; so was the whole City in no small danger to be utterly destroyed. So witnesseth Ensebinus. Αλεξανδρεια

σὺν τῇ Αἰγυπτῷ εἰς ὑποταξίαν τοῦ Ἀχιλλεύς ἀχθεῖσιν, ἐκ ἀντιπα-τῆς Ρωμαίων περιβολῆς καὶ ὡς πλείστοι ἀντιέδιδαν. This I have read, I say, and this may well agree with Diocletians sentencing his Lady Alexandra to the sword: but then it hath no reference unto our Martyr, who had not any intercourse with the affayres of that rebellious City. We therefore doe conceive it, that under this cloud and parable, the Arians might involve the state of Alexandria, under George their Bishop. A City which hee found devoted to the memory of their godly Prelate Athanasius: and therefore dead to him and the Arian party. This City he restord, as they perhaps would have us thinke, againe to life; or to a true and lively sayth, by his continuall prayers and preaching. The mis-give some countenance to this interpretation. Where

*Athanas. in Apol.
ad Const. p. 345.*

he perswades the people, to weane themselves from earthly thoughts, and set their mindes on heavenly and eternall comforts: Ἐπαγαγὼν ὅτι αὐτὰ τὰ σπουδαιότερα Γεωργίου, George; their most reverend Bishop being so able to direct them. And not so onely, but ἀφίστασθ τῆς Ἀθανασίου ἀντιπα-τοῦς: to desist altogether from their love to Athanasius, and cleave to him whom he had sent to be their Pastor. A City, which when George himselfe, was led unto his death, the Arians would have us thinke that he boldly comforted; and thoroughly established in the truths of their religion: so thoroughly, that for religions sake, they were content to die, and to suffer with him. The first of these constructions, reflecteth on the story, as it is related by Nicephorus: the latter, as it is expressed in the words of Bede. As for the sentence passed upon upon that Lady, in the report of Menophastes, it hath relation (as I take it) to that great wrath conceived against this City, by Julian the Apostata, for their tumultuous killing of their Bishop, without law & order. Who though he pardoned them the crime, yet he rebuked them very sharply in his letters; μήχεις ὁ χαμῆς τὸν ἐκκλησιαστον, and was exceedingly offended with them for that great contempt, both of his government and person.

Socr. l. 5 7.

Story

(9) These passages I conceive, as before I said, to have been thrust into the history of our Martyr by the Arian hereticks. If any be perswaded rather, that those who after penned the acts and sufferings of St. George, encountered with some, which the Arians had written of their George of Alexandria; and without care or further search applied these passages in the one, unto the other: I will not quarrell either them or their opinion. Only I could have wished, that those who have committed unto memory, the life and actions of this Saint, as of many others, had not deserved to have their judgements questioned, if not their honesty. I mean, if those which have committed unto memory the sacred Monuments of the Christian Church; had not so mingled truth with falsehood, light with darkness, unwarrantable Tales, with Stories undeniable: and in a word, confounded, as it were into one masse, the Temple of the living God, with Idols. It therefore was an excellent caveat of Melchior Canus to his Historian, that he should neyther canvass over idle Pamphlets, nor give beleefe to old wives Fables: Nec prius lecta audire describat, quam ea prudenti atque accurato iudicio expendat ac seligeret; nor put downe any thing into the body of his History, before he had examined it, whether or no it were agreeable to truth. For the defect of which, both judgement in the choice, and industrie in the examining; as hee doth seeme to touch a little at Beda, in his English History, and Gregory in his Dialogues: so doth he fall more freely on Vincentius, and on Antoninus Florentinus: Vtrumque horum non tam dedisse operam ut res veras easque describerent, quam ne nihil omnino praterirent, quod scriptum in schedulis quibuslibet reperiretur. It seemes

Lib. 11. cap. 3.

Ib. 11. cap. 6.

seemes (sayth hee) to bee the chiefe designe of those two Authors, not so much to register things true and certaine, as not to leave out any thing which they had seene recorded. Yet this the lesse to be disprayed or blamed in them, in that Baronius, whom the world accounts so much above them, is guilty also of the same folly. Of whom our Casaubon observe's, delectum eum saepe nullum habuisse veri aut falsi, &c. That many times hee makes no difference betweene truth and falshood; as if it had belonged unto him, to bring all he met with, in his Annals. Nor doth Baronius himselfe denie the action, but give's this reason for it, if it be a reason: ne quid legentium animis subtraxisse videatur; lest els he might be thought to defraud his Reader. This, if it may bee his defence, shall be theirs also.

CHAP.

CHAP. III.

(1) A proposition of the two contrary opinions. (2) Calvin the first that ever bid defiance to Saint George. (3) Melanchthon misreported by the Papists. (4) Calvins opinion in it, by whom seconded in ferreine Churches. (5) And by whom in England. (6) Saint George by whom first made an Arian Bishop. (7) This last opinion defended both by some for-reigne Divines ; (8) And some English also. (9) The two opinions impossible to be reconciled. (10) The fruitlesse labour of Doctor Raynolds to effect it. (11) An examination of the Arguments drawne from the Canon of Geladius. (12) And the authority of Cardinall Baronius.

(1)

Hus have wee shewne, how St. George hath suffered even a second Persecution : how he is made a Martyr, not in his person only, but in his History. Yet all that hath been spoken of him hitherto, is but an easie Purgatory, in reference to that Hell which is to follow. For if the Legend did belie him, it onely was (as they conceiv'd it) to his greater credit : or if the Arians mingled any of their leaven with his story, it was to keep alive in him the memory of a stout Champion of their own; to shrowd him under the protection of our blessed Martyr. But now St. George must eyther poast away unto the Land of Faeries, and there remaine for ever, with other the Chimeras of an idle head : or which is worse, bee layde for all eternity in the pit of horreur, with Heretickes and Atheists. The onely favour which this our curious and quicke-sighted age, can possibly vouchsafe him ; is to affirme it by his friends, that he had never any being on the earth. For if he stand to that, it is concluded by his enemies, that without hope of Bayle, or any mercy of maineprise, he must bee in Hell. Durus est hic sermo ; This is a hard saying, who can beare it ?

2 And

(2) And first beginning with those enemies of his which are most favourable unto him; wee finde how they resolve it, that there was never any such man, as St. George the Martyr. I say which are most favourable; for as it is farre better to be well, then simply to be; so it is a more fortunate and blessed state, not to be at all, than to be alwayes miserable. A fonder this opinion had, incomparably the wisest man that ever the French Church enjoyd, since the time it enjoyed him. So saith incomparable Hooker. A man, whose bare assertion is by some thought of greater credit, than proofes and reason in another. But wee that are not sworn unto him, nor to his opinions, exempt him not from possibility of error. This were not to cry downe the pretended privilege of Saint Peters Chair; the cause of so much mischief in the Christian Church: but to translate it to Geneva. He in his third booke of the Institutes of Christian Religion, published in October 1536. doeth with good reason taxe the Papists, for attributing to the Saints those honours, which are due onely unto CHRIST. In which abuse (sayth he) they have so farre proceeded, that now our Saviours Intercession is conceiv'd unprofitable; unlesse Hippolitus, or George, or such like counterfeits, concurre Sep. 20. Sect. 27. with him. Nil est Christo reliquum facere, qui prohibito ducunt ejus intercessionem, nisi accedant Georgius, aut Hippolitus, aut similes larvæ. So hee, and this is μὴτις ἐν ἰλαρίῳ, a great deale of resolution in a litle language. Now lest we should mistake our selves in this word larvæ, the learned Doctor Reynolds tels us, that his meaning in it is, Georgium similem q̃ De Jdol. Ec. R. nunquam existisse, that neither George, nor other Saints of Id. 1. c. 5. Sect. 204. that condition, had ever any being. And this construction he affirms out of Canisius the lesuite, in his fift booke de Maria Virgine, where hee upbraids it unto Luther, Calvin, and Melanchthon, that they had left St. George no place nor roome in nature. Certe Canisius Iesuita agnoscit hunc fuisse Calvini mentem, in Larvarum nomine, quæ ait, nobilissimo Martyri Georgio, Lutherum, Calvinum, Melanchthonem, aliquos Sellarum, nec inter homines, nec in rerum natura locum reliquum facium. So farre the Doctors Commentary upon Calvins text.

(3); Bus

De beat. Sancti.
c. 20.

Apol. Aug. Conf.
art. de Inuoc. S.

Vell. patre. l. 2.

(3) But here I muſt digreſſe a little to remove a block; which elſe would trouble me. For if that Luther and Melancthon, as by Canisius it appeares, were of this opinion: then have we done them wrong, to caſt the honour of their voyage and diſcovery upon another. A thing in which I think the Ieſuite miſreporteth them of ſet purpoſe: that ſo the victory, in caſe they could obtaine it, might be thought the greater. Its true that Bellarmino affirms the ſame againſt Melancthon. Ita ratioſinatur Philippus in Apol. articulo 21. Confeſſionis Agußane; ſaith the Cardinall. But not a word in him of Luther; and I perſwade my ſelfe he had never ſpared him, had he found it in him. And for Melancthon, all that hee affirms, is this, that they (the Papiſts) have in an imitation of the Gentiles, aſſigned unto particular Saints, particular imployments; making Saint Anne (ſhe was the mother of our Lady) the Patronelle of Riches, and Saint George the god of Souldiers. Hæret & hic error apud doctos, (theſe are his words) quod ſingulis Sanctis certa procuraciones commiſſæ ſunt; ita ut Anna divitiis largiatur, Georgius teneatur equites, &c. Hæ perſuaſiones planè oræ ſunt ex ethnicis exemplis. This is all, and this I verily belecue the learned Papiſts will not ſtick at: ſure I am, the Church of England, no enemy to St. George, hath ſaid as much, and was never quarrell'd for it, in the third part of the Homily againſt the perill of Idolatry. What (ſaith the Homily) I pray you, be ſuch Saints with us, to whom we attribute the defence of certaine Countreyes, but dys ſetelares of the Gentiles, &c. Yea, every Artificer and Profeſſion hath his ſpeciall Saint, as a particular God: as for example, Schollers have Saint Nicholas and Saint Gregory; Painters, Saint Luke, &c. Neither lack Souldiers their Mars, and ſo forth. Thus are the Romanists affected towards Luther and Melancthon, as old Rome was to Carthage; apt to beleeve what ever was informed againſt them, though in it ſelfe vnworthy credit. Idque magis quia volebant Romani quicquid de Carthaginienſibus diceretur, credere; quàm quia credenda afferebantur. So the Historian.

(4) But to proceed, the next of ſpeciall note which hath hath rejected this our Martyr, is Cheemnitius; by birth, a German; by profession, a Lutheran: And though a Lutheran, yet in opposing the abuses of the Church of Rome, which was the common quarrell; might without prejudice to his party, concur with Calvin in this point, if not follow him. Hee, in his examination of the Trent doctrine, (writ in theyeere 1565.) and in his scanning of the 25. Session of that Councell, entituled, De veneratione Sanctorum, thus hath it. Quinetiam multos Pontificij Sanctos venerantur, qui nunquam vel vixerunt, vel in rerum natura fuerunt, ut Georgium, &c. Viz, that those of Rome doe worship many Saints, which never liv'd upon the Earth, as George and others. So he, and so Chamier a French man: who in his first Tome of Controversies, lately publish'd, hath told us, that the Papists have transformed the faith of CHRIST, into the idolatrie of the Gentiles: appointing Catharine, in the roome of Pallas; St. Christopher, for Atlas; and St. George, for Perseus. Papistas Christianam pietatem in ethnicam Idololatriam transformasse, remq; ipsam servasse mutatis nominibus: Catharinam viz. pro Pallade, Christopherrum pro Atlante, Georgium pro Perseo nominantes. If so, if that the story of St. George be an expression only of Perseus, as he would have it; what shall we say to Perkins, who makes it a representation of our blessed Saviour? Now lest we should mistake our selves in Chamiers meaning, we must referre his text unto his Index; and there he points to his second book & sixteenth chapter, where the precedent passage is, with, Georgium Cappadox fictitium, St. George of Cappadocia a feined person. This plain enough: yet not more plaine then that of Dan. Tilenus in his Synagoga, part. 2. where he assures us, that as the ancient Idolaters did worship many deities which were not any thing in nature, so those of Rome adored and invocated such like Idols also, as George, and Christopher, and Cathe- Disput. 501 rine. Quemadmodum veteres Idololatra numina quadam venerabantur, quæ nihil nisi insani cerebri erant sanxæuata: ita similia prorsus idola hodie invocant Pontificij, cujusmodi sunt Georgius, Christopherrus, Catharina, aliq; in Romanis Martyrologiis relati tragelaphi. So he; and this is round, and home unto the purpose.

E

(3) To

Idol of the last times, vol. I.
p. 682.

In Lexico poetico
p. 219

Gosp. on the 2
Sund, in Lent.

5. Sunday after Easter.

Cap. 60. Suff. 10

(5) To these Divines of forreigne Churches, wee will adjoyne some of our owne, some English, who have concurred with them in this particular: and I will begin with Master Perkins, who affirms it thus. St. George on Hock-backe, was in former times a representation of our Saviour, who vanquished the Divell for the delivery of his Church. Now this, and the like pictures of mysteries, were in proceſſe of time reputed pictures of Saints: and are worshipped at this day of many, as they have formerly beene, for the Images of Saints indeed. Some former Theologues, it seemeth, had beene thus conceited; to whom Charles Stephens alludeth, saying: Theologi nonnulli existimant fictitium esse nomen (Georgium) sub quo veteres, Christi, Ecclesiam à Satana tyrannide liberantis, imaginem, & passionis meritum proposuerunt. The next in course of time (for so I have of purpose rank'd them) is Doctor Boys, late Deane of Canterbury. The Romish Church (sayth hee) hath Canoniz'd many for Saints, who can bee no better then Devils, &c. So the Papists adore Papian a Milensian Hereticke; Becket, a great traytour; Sanders, an open rebell: and others who were neither Saints in Heaven, nor men on earth, as St. Christopher, St. George, &c. And in another place, -- For it is doubted, and by Papists of best note, whether there were any St. George, St. Christopher, St. Catharine; Cardinall Bellarmine confessing, that the Legends of these three Saints are uncertayne and Apocryphall, according to the censure of Pope Gelasius. And last of all, in a Sermon of his on the fifth day of November, -- An Idoll, as St. Paul affirms, 1. Cor. 8. is nothing; ergo, the Papists in worshipping St. George, which is nothing, commit abominable idolatry. To make an end, we will conclude and shut up all with that of Dr. Cranthorpe, in his defence of the Church of England, against the calumnies of that desperate Rengado, M. Antonio de Dominis: who speaking of the grosse and palpable idolatries of Rome, agreeth in this particular, with those that went before him; though in a different language. Nihil de eo dico, quòd pro Sancti fragmenta sequemur vobis collitis, & invocatis: S. Georgium, S. Christophorum. Mibi vide. Non Sancti, non vel homines isti fuerunt, sed allegoria, & symbola. They were not men (sayth hee) but allegories, and symbols. Which last he labours to confirme, out of the testimony of Baronius; where he defends against Jacobus de Voragine, that our St. George, as he is commonly described in picture, is to be counted rather Symbolicall, than Historicall. Picturam illam S. Georgij, qua eques armatus effingitur, &c. symboli potius, quam Historie alienius opinor esse expressam imaginem. Thus the Cardinall.

*Annol. in Mart.
Rom. Apr. 23.*

(6) Thus have we shewed, how, and by whom, Saint George, whom for so many Ages the whole Church reckoned for a Saint, is accounted no body: a larva, a non-ens, a fictitious person, a trapulaphus, an idoll, and allegory, and a symbole; a deity created by some madde and idle braine, for the poore people to fall downe and worship. But in the next place, wee shall see it layd unto her charge; that shee hath made them worship, not a shadow, not a vaine fiction onely; but even a wicked Tyrant, a most damnable and bloody Heretique. Calvin at first tooke an occasion to except against St. George: and there was presently inough, who eyther out of reverend affection which they bare unto the man, or else in hatred unto Rome, did without more ado, concurre with him in the same opinion. And so it stood untill the yeere 1596. when Doctor Reynolds published his so celebrated worke, entituled, De Idololatria Ecclesie Romanae. A man, to speake no lesse of him, than in truth and verity hee hath deserv'd, of large abilities: et de his non minus, &c. in the words of Aristotle, well read and studied in all parts and wayes of learning. He, then considering with himselfe how little likelihood there was, that the whole Church should be so generally well devoted unto the memory of one, that had no being; especially so many Apostles, of which his infinite reading could informe him, concurring in the mention and report of such a Martyr: could not see well, how that conceit of Calvins might any longer be supported. Yet loath withall, to loose that excellent advantage which might accrew unto the maine of his designe, from that Imposture; if it should fall out to be so: he rather chose to make Saint George an Arian Bishop, in which device he thought he could allledge some countenance from Antiquity, than fall upon the former course, which hee conceiv'd unwarrantable. His reasons

L. 1. c. 5. Sect. 20 are derived first from the reverend authority of Athanasius and Greg. Nazianzen, by whom it is reported, how George by birth a Cappadecian, and an Arian by profession, was by Constantius the Emperour installed Bishop of Alexandria: and being slaine in a commotion or uproare of the people, was by some afterwards reputed as a Martyr, though undeservedly, as it appeares (saith hee) in Epiphanius. His words are these. Namque^a Athanasius & Greg. Nazianzen testantur Georgium Cappadocem, hominem improbum, hereticum Arianum, malum genere, pejorem animo, cum militari manu & satellitibus Alexandriam, à Constantio missum, pro Episcopo ejus urbis se gessisse. Qui cum ab Ethnicis crudelissime sub Juliano Apostata peremptus esset, cadaverque ejus igne crematum, & cineros in mare projecti, ne honorifice tanquam Martyr à Christianis sepeliretur; à nonnullis postea pro Martyre coli caput, immerito, ut eos redarguens docet Epiphanius: veruntamen coli cepit. After (saith hee) his acts and passion, being composed and published by the Sectaries, found such applause and entertainment, that the whole Church, both East and West, thus trumpe'd & baffled by the hereticks, assum'd their George into the number of the holy Martyrs. Immo si accuratius animadvertatur, &c. patebit universali Ecclesiæ, i. orientalem et occidentalem, ab Arianis delusam, Georgium Arianum pro Martyre coluisse. For further proove of this, hee tels us of Paschyrates, and c Metaphrastes, of d Antoninus, and e Vincentius, that they make mention all of them, of that great skirmish which our Martyr had with Athanasius a Magician; and that hee is by them and others, said to bee borne in Cappadocia, & as was also George the Arian. Adde hereunto, that Beda makes him suffer under Dacianus King of Persia, a Prince that had no lesse then seventy Kings at his Command; and that the Arian Legend cited in Baronius, doth also so report it; save that the under-Princes are there numbered

a Apol. de fuga, & Apol. 2. Ep. ad solitar. vit. agentes, & ad ubig. Orthod.
b Orat. in lau-dem Ath.
Amm. Marc.
l. 22.
Meres 76.

c Apud Sarrum
de probat. S. bist.
tom. 2.
d Hist. part. 1.
tit. 3 c. 1.
Sect. 23:
e Specul. bistor.
l. 22 c. 13 l.
f In Martyrol.
9. Cal. May.

numbered to be seventy five : Sed unum est idemque somnium : but this (saith he) is but the selfe-same Dreame, a little altered in the telling.

(7) The way thus opened by a man of that esteeme, as Doctor Reynolds alwayes carried, and the opinion countenanced by such variety of learning, such multiplicity of allegations ; no marvell, if without further question, it found a willing entertainment : Not at home only, but in all parts abroad, where the Idolatries of Rome were talk'd of, and disproved. And first, we meet with Iunius in his animadversions on the Cardinall, published anno 1600, who with a little variation of the phrase, hath thus expressed the Doctors judgement ; Georgium Cappadocem hereticum Ari-anum, hominem fuisse sceleratissimum, qui à Constantio missus, Episcopatum Alexandrina Ecclesia militari manu occupaverit, se-stantur Athanasius, & Greg. Nazianzenus. Qui postea ab Ethniciis interceptus, auditis Martyr etiam apud imprudentes Christianos, quod Epiphanius reprehendit. Next him Polanus in his Syntagma Theologicum printed 1606 : so well affected in this point unto Doctor Reynolds, and to his fancy of S. George, that he is loath to changethe words : for thus hee hath it : Georgius ille Cappadix, quem Romanenses pro Sancto colunt, fuit homo improbus, hereticus Ariannus, malus genere, pejor animo, qui cum militari manu & satellitibus Alexandriam à Constantio missus pro Episcopo ejus urbis se gessit. Qui cum ab Ethniciis sub Iuliano Apostata crudelissimè peremptus esset, cadaverque ejus igne crematum, & cineres in mare projecti ; à nonnullis postea pro Martyro colicapti, sed immeritò : nec eos redarguens docet Epiphanius. Thus they, and this the very same with that which was before recited out of Doctor Reynolds : we need not English them. The next in course of time, Peter du Moulin, late Preacher to the French Church in Paris. Hee in his answer unto Cardinall Péron, in the defence of our late most excellent Sovereigne now with God, hath one whole Chapter with this title, viz. Quelle assurance l'eglise Romaine a, que les Saints qu'elle invoque sont vé-rayement Saints ; What good assurance those of Rome can have of this, that those Saints which commonly they worship, were Saints indeed. And there wee read it, Combien absurde est la fable de St. George combattant a cheval contre un Dragon ? Chacun scait que les ennemis de S. Athanasie l'accusoyent d'estre Magicien, et que son ennemi capital fut George Arien, lequel empierra son seige. Dont appert que ce George estoit un Heretique Arien. How foolish and ridiculous (saith he) is that old fable of St. George on Horseback, encountering with the Dragon. Every man knoweth that the enemies of St. Athanasius accused him of Sorcery and Magick, and that his capitall enemy was George the Arian, which intruded himselfe into the Church of Alexandria : whence it is evident, that their George can bee no other then that Arian Heretique. The reason is, C'est a vis dit qu'il a eu des grands combats contre le Magicien Athanasie : because his Legend tells us, that he had many bickerings with the Magician Athanasius.

(8) Of our owne Churches I will also mention three others, whereof the first is, Doctor Primrose ; who in a letter to my Lord of Exeter now being, and extant in a little booke entituled the Reconciler, touching the visibility and being of the Roman Church ; doth thus expresse himselfe, and " in these words, Nay as Calvin said truly, CHRIST, in " the Roman Church, is hardly knowne amongst the Saints : " of whom some bee in heaven, as the Apostles, &c. and " some in hell, as St. George an Arian Heretique, and bloody " Butcher of true Christians. So he ; and this is, contrary to the proverbe, foet and soure. In the next place take the assent of Doctor Hakewel, in his Examination of the common error touching the decay of nature. The first whole " Chapter of which worke is employed in this, That there " are many of these opinions which are commonly recei- " ved both in ordinary speech, and in the writings of lear- " ned men, which notwithstanding are by others either " manifestly convinced of falshood, or at least wise suspo- " sed justly of it. And in particular. In History Ecclesiasti- " call (saith hee) it is commonly received, that St. George " was an holy Martyr, and that he conquered the Dragon ; " whereas Doctor Reynolds prooves him to have been both

" wicked man, and an Arian, by the testimony of Epiphanius, Athanasius, and Greg. Nazianzen. And Baronius
 " himselfe in plaine termes affirmeth, Apparet totam illam
 " de actis Georgij fabulam, fuisse communem Arianorum ; It
 " appeares that the whole story of St. George is nothing else
 " but a forgery of the Arians. Yet was he receiv'd (as we " know) as a canonized Saint through Christendome, and " to be the Patron both of our nation, and of the most ho" nourable Order of Knighthood in the world. And in " the last place Doctor Fealty, who tels us in his Ancilla pie-
 " tatis, with how great piety and prudence the Church of " England hath pared off many of those Festivals which were " before a burden both to Church and State. And then hee
 " addeth, Saint Christopher, and Longinus, and the Seven
 " Sleepers may seeke for a festivall in Viopia, extra annis solis-
 " que vias. There is no reason they should have a day in the " Calender, that never saw day in this world. Much lesse " that George the Arian, or Becket the traytour should have " an holy day kept for them ; who were so farre from be" ing holy themselves. Thus, in these words, the two Pa" trons and Abettours of the two contrary opinions have de" clared themselves.

(9) I say the contrary opinions, for such they are : so contrary, that it is a matter of impossibility to reconcile them. For if Saint George, as Calvin hath it, be a counterfeit, a larva ; one that had never any being in rerum natura, as Chomacius thinks ; or a fictitious person, as Chamier calls him ; a tragelaphus in the fancy of Tullius ; or a mere representation only, as Perkins ; an Idoll, as Deane Boys ; an allegory, or non homo, as Doctor Craucanthorp informes us ; then can he not be possibly that Arian Bishop which he is said to be by Doctor Reynolds. Or if hee were that Arian Bishop, that homo improbus, that hereticke, that wicked man, that bloody butcher now in hell, as the others tell us ; how is it possible he should be any of those fictions & Chimaras, which hee is said to bee by Calvin, and his followers. To bee, and not to be, is not a greater contradiction, as I take it, then that he now should bee in hell amongst the damned, who never

De Idol. Rom.
lib. 1. cap. 5.

had a former being: or that an Arrian Bishop never was any thing in nature; or that it can be possible for non homo, to be homo improbus. I know that Doctor Reynolds doth endeavour so to exhibit Calvins opinion to the world; that probably it may be thought not to be different from his owne: and yet gives such a Commentary upon Calvins words, as makes all hopes of their agreement very desperate. Calvin hath called S. George a larva. What may his meaning bee in this? The Doctor tels us in these words, which are worth our marking; hac voce, voluit obiter ut solet multa paucis, etiam hanc perstringere abominationem in Papistica Sanctorum invocatione, quod aliquos ad Deum allegant pro Patronis, qui nunquam in rerum natura existerint. In this one word (saith " Doctor Reynolds) he taxeth by the way: (as commonly he comprehends much matter in few syllables) even this " abomination in the Popish invoking of the Saints, that " they make use of some as Patrons, for their more free access to God, which never had a being yet upon the earth. This is not all, for then it followes hereupon, Idq. ex primo, quem nominat Georgia percipere potuit Bellarminus, &c. And " this (saith he) the Cardinall might easily perceive to bee " Calvins meaning, in that hee placeth George in the very " front: and as it seemes, he did perceive it, in that he reckoned this amongst Calvins arguments, multos ab is invocari, qui non modo Sancti sed nec homines fuerunt; that many in the Church of Rome were invoked as Saints, which " were never men, as Christopher, and George, and others. That this was Calvins meaning, the Doctor proves yet by the construction and interpretation of Camsius before alleged. And in the end concludeth, Calvinus igitur, Georgium, Hippolytum, et similes larvas vocans, significat eos nunquam existisse: Calvin by calling George, Hippolytus, and the like, by the name of larva, doth intimate unto us, that they never had existence.

(10) So farre hee playeth the Commentator, and hee doth it well; agreeably unto the text. But looke upon him as he undertakes to be a reconciler, and then he failes us: Calvin (saith he) affirme's St. George, to bee a larva:

&c.

& reſte, and he doth it juſtly. Why? Nam Georgium dicte bellatorem illum, cuius lancea Draconem vulneratum eſſe, virginemque mortiſ periculo liberatam, narrat Iacobus de Voragine. He meanes (ſayth he) that George the ſouldier, who is reported by Iacobus de Voragine to have kill'd a Dragon; and thereby ſav'd from death a diſtreſſed damoſell. And ſuch a George (ſayth Doctor Reynolds) that there never was, conſtat ex omnium probatorum & gravium hiſtoricorum ſilentio; is evident out of the ſilence of all grave and approved Writers. This is the maine, which we muſt truſt to, for the reconciliation: and this, as I conceive, is never likely to effect it. For be it granted, that St. George did not kill the Dragon; what then? will this be prooffe ſufficient, that therefore hee muſt needs be counted a larva, or a trageſophus, or non-homo? Then may we juſtly ſay, S. Hierome is a larva, becauſe not ſuch a Hierome; viz. a Cardinall of the Church of Rome, as in their fables and their pictures, ſome have made him: no Writer of thoſe times, affirming that hee was of that condition. And that S. Hilary of Poytiers was a larva alſo, becauſe not ſuch an Hilary, as is reported in the Legends, to be convented before Leo Pope of Rome, an Arian Heretick: no approved Author making mention of any Leo, that ſate about thoſe times in S. Peters chayre. Or that S. Cyprian is a larva, becauſe not ſuch a Cyprian as the Greeke Church beleev'd, and Nazianzene relates at large, to have beene a conjurer, and by his Magicall inchantments, to have aſſayed the chaſtity of one Iuſtiana, a Chriſtian. Were this interpretation good, I might affirme with ſafety, that S. Denys, and S. Dominicke, and S. Duſſan, are all larvæ; and indeed who not: and then expound my ſelfe, as meaning no ſuch Duſſane, Dominicke, or Denys, as are deſcribed unto us in the ordinary Legends. And ſo proceeding in that manner, conclude the like of the Apoſtles: and after ſhift it off; by ſaying, that I call them ſo, in reference to thoſe paſſages which are affabulated to them in Abdias Babylonius; no approved Writer, that I know of, concurring with that fabler, in his relations. But to proceed, the Doctour doubting, leſt *Bellarmin*e ſhould object, or ſome for him, that

George

Virgin

George may be a Saint, and an holy Martyr, although hee did not kill the Dragon ; make's answer, that the Church had beene deceived in so beleeving : that George, who had so long beene honored as a Saint, both in the East and Westerne Churches ; being indeede no other, then an Arian Heretick. Which sayd, he laboreth to make good this last opinion ; whereof he onely was the Author : by such quotations and collections out of sundry Writers, as are before in brieft related. This is the proceffe of the whole. In which, if there be any thing which may attone the difference, and reconcile the Doctours iudgement, with that of Calvin ; I must confesse my selfe so dull, that I cannot see it : and yet have tried all meanes, I could, to cleere my eye-sight. The rather, because I heare it is objected, that I have made a difference, where was none at all ; sowne enmity and division betweene bosome friends : and that the two opinions are so easie, for to be accorded ; that one may well, without offence unto the truth, embrace them both. Certant pugnantia secum Frontibus adversis componere. This only, and this once for all. Vnlesse this consequence bee good, that needes St. George must be a larva, a non homo, a fictitious person ; because no creditable Author tell's us, that hee killed the Dragon : and since hee did not kill the Dragon, that therefore he must needs be George the Arian : I cannot choose, but say, as before I sayd, that possibly there can be no agreement made betweene them.

(11) But it is now time, that we returne unto St. George, whom we have left alone to make good his party, against these severall Squadrons : both which already have defied him, and are now eager for the battaile. And questionlesse, we might expect a bloody day, could they agree among themselves : for heere is Ephraim against Manasses, and Manasses against Ephraim. but both together against Isidab. And though we might according to the ordinary course of Warre, preserve our selves intire, and lie aloofe in expectation of the issue ; while they contend and fight it out among themselves ; yet wee will doe our best to give each party satisfaction, though we despaire to make them friends.

I say

I say to give each party satisfaction, which may soone bee done: there being but one argument, more than the credit of their Leaders, to bee alleaged for eyther party. Of these the one is brought on the behalfe of those, which holde St. George to be a fiction, or non ens; out of the Canon and Decree of Pope Gelasius: the other, on their side which make our Saint an Arian Bishop; out of the writings of the famous Cardinall Baronius. These we will answer first, referring such as may be urged on the behalfe of Calvin; and have already beene alleaged by Doctour Reynolds; to their severall times and places. And first it is alleaged by Doctor Stour Boys, that Bellarmines confesseth that the Legend of St. George is uncertayne and Apocryphall, according to the censure of Pope Gelasius. In this I will not take upon me to be Bellarmines Attorney; Etatem habet, hee is olde Lib. de beat. Sanct. c. 20. enough: Let him in Gods name be his owne Advocate, and answer for himselfe. A thing to which hee may bee easily intreated, and therefore makes reply, that true it is, some of the stories of the Saints are both uncertaine and Apocryphall. What then? Yet notwithstanding it doeth not follow thereupon, that therefore there were no such Saints. Resp. Sanctorum quorundam historia Apocryphas esse, & incertae; non tamen propterea Sanctos ipsos nunquam fuisse. As for the censure of Pope Gelasius, we grant indeed (sayeth he) that he hath noted, the story of St. George which was then extant, to be Apocryphall: but wee must also tell you, that in the very same Decree and Canon, he doth afford St. George all due and pious honour. Quocirca Gelasius Pontifex Historiam Georgij (qua tunc extabat) inter Apocryphas numerat; & tamen ipsum S. Georgium colendum, esse affirmat. So Bellarmines: and how this testimony of his, out of the Canon of Gelasius, may be produced to the discredit of Saint George; is, I confesse, above my reason. But of Gelasius, and his Canon, more hereafter, when wee produce them on our party.

(12) The other argument, is on their part, who make St. George an Arian Bishop; drawne from Baronius, in his Annotations on the Roman Martyrologie, Apr. 23. And I may may well say, it is drawne from him, for even a blind man may perceive that it came not from him willingly; no nor naturally neyther. Baronius (sayth Doctor Hakewell) " in plaine tearmes affirmeth, Apparet totam illam de Actis Georgij fabulam fuisse commentum Arianorum. It appeares " that the whole story of George, is nothing else but a forgery of the Arians. What then? Might not Baronius himselfe bee deceiv'd? And shall wee cast away a Saint to please a Cardinall? For granting that Baronius himselfe said it, yet was it only the opinion of Baronius, and other men, as good as he, have sayd the contrary. But certainly Baronius himselfe tells us no such matter: I am sure hee meanes it not. Not meanes it I am sure: for had hee thought the whole story of Saint George, onely to bee a forgery of the Arians; he would not then have tooke such paines, to reckon up so many Authors (as he there doth) in whom there is such honourable mention made of our blessed Martyr. Nor doth Baronius himselfe say so, absolutely, or at all, of the whole history of St. George the Martyr: but onely relatively, and in reference to an old story writ by the Arians, as he thought, of their George of Alexandria. The proceesse of the whole is this. The Cardinall makes mention of the Decree and Canon of Gelasius, wherein the History of George the Martyr, is reckoned as Apocryphall: and thereupon goeth on to tell us, what paines himselfe had taken in search of that exploded story so branded by Gelasius. At last (sayth he) rumbling about my Library, I found a certayne History of Saint George, full of prodigious lies, and such as have not any likelinesse with other miracles. Insunt preterea illic quaedam accepta ab Hereticis atque Gentilibus; ut consilius ille Georgij cum Athanasio Maga. Alludit nimirum impius author ad Georgium Arianum Episcopum, invasorem sordis Alexandria; &c. Athanasium autem Magnum ab Arianis appellatum, Acta concilii habuli Tyri satis decens. Besides (saith he) there are some passages therein borrowed, no question, from the Hereticks, as how that George should have great bickerings with the Magitian Athanasius: the impious author questionlesse alluding unto George of Alexandria, Annotat. in R.

Martyrol. Apr.
23.

Alexandria, and that extreame hatred which hee bare to holy Athanasius; whom in the Conventicle of Tyre, they accused of Sorcery. Thereupon he inferres, ex quibus sane apparet totam illam fabulam de actis Georgy fuisse commentum Arianorum. Construe methis, and we shall finde Baronius himselfe no enemy unto St. George; but onely for that Legend, in particular, of the which he speakes, Ille, is there a relative, and points us to the story, and to that onely, which before he mentiond, written as he supposed, by the Arian Heretickes; and fabula, in all my reading, is not an History, but a fiction, or fabulous narration. Put this together, and it will amount to this, that tota illa fabula, in Baronius, is not the whole story of George, as the Doctour renders it; but that whole fabulous narration (before mentioned) as the Cardinall intend's it.

CHAP.

CHAP. IIII.

(1) A conjecture at those reasons which may make the History of St. George suspected. (2) The Church of Rome too prodigall in bestowing Divine honours. (3) False Saints no prejudice into the truth. (4) The lives of Saints how fabulously and vainly written. (5) What might induce the Church-Historians to this vein of writing. (6) The undertaking of Aloysius Lippemantius, how well performed. (7) The inter-mixture of vain Fables no prejudice to truth of Story. (8) Of Arthur, Guy of Warwick, and Sir Bevis. (9) Hereticall dreames and practices not able to beare downe the truth. (10) An application of the whole to St. George.

(1)

Thus are we come at last to the main shocke and fury of the battaile : wherein if our successe be answerable to the beginnings, we need not doubt, but that Saint George may keepe his place in the heaven of glories. A matter which I have lesse cause to feare, because I finde not heere, in the first place, cyther authorities or reasons, set to charge upon me. Onely a single name, and a bare assertion, stand ready to defend it selfe, and make good the day: as Scæva once opposed himselfe in the defence of Cæsars trenches, against the whole force of the Pompeians. A name, I must confesse, which I gladly honour : and doubt not but there was, as he conceived it, somewhat which occasion'd in him that opinion, although he pleased not to expresse it. Yet give mee leave to say, that it is Reason and Prooffe chiefly, which enobleth and commends an Author : and not the greatnesse of his Name, or confidence of affirmation. Et quanquam in autore satis rationis est, ratio tamen quolibet magnum autorem facit; as we read it in Velleius. I say, I doubt not, but that Reverend

Reverend and famous man who first declar'd himselfe openly, and in termes expresse, against our blessed Saint & Martyr: did not oppose himselfe against an History so generally receiv'd, as this; without some shew of reason, which might incline and move him to it. Which reasons since it hath not pleased him to deliver to us in his Writings: we will make bold, as neere as possibly we can, to conjecture at them. A work of no great difficulty unto any, who hath the least acquaintance with the essayes and passages of the Roman Church, as they then stood, when the story of St. George was called in question. I conceive it thus. The Romish Legends, and not those onely, but even the publicke service of that Church, had made St. George, just like to Perseus in the Poe, in killing of a monstrous Dragon; and freeing of a Lady, sole Daughter to a King, from his unmercifull cruelty. Those stories also, which reported of his Death & Martyrdom, had in them (as it might be thought) many grosse and notable absurdities: as that he suffred under, I know not what Dacianus, King of Persia, a Monarch that had under him no lesse than 70. tributary Princes: though others have it, under the Emperour Diocletian; this Dacianus being then President of his Councell. Now being so, that they agreed not with themselves; and that there never was, at or about that time, a King of Persia of that name, and greatnesse of command; nor any such like action to be found in true antiquity, as his encounter with the Dragon: This might perhaps occasion, that the whole History became suspected; and therefore that Saint George might fairly, as he thought, be dismissed out of the Calendar. Adde unto this, that shamefull liberty which the Man of Rome had tooke unto himselfe, of Canonizing Saints, and ordering the dignities and powers of Heaven, and that profuse and lavish prodigality, wherewith hee did confere the divinest honours on unworthy persons, and sometimes such, as are supposed to have had no being: and wee shall quickly see, that Calvin had some shew of reason, why hee reputed our Saint George among his countermocks or Larvæ, though, as before I sayd, it did not please him to expresse it.

it. These are, as I conceive it, the reasons of especial moment : and these we can as easily conjure downe, as wee rais'd them up.

(2) And first, not to say any thing of that arrogant liberty assum'd by them of Rome, in making Saints ; nor of those many Ceremonies which they use in that solemnity ; both of them borrowed from that so famous Amulet of beasthen Rome, whereby their Emperours were enroll'd among their gods : not to say any thing of these, it is not to be questioned, but that the Church of Rome hath beene exceeding prodigall of that greatest and most heavenly honour. Wee (know indeed) that innocent and pious Christianity, in the first times, registred those as Saints, and those onely, which had confessed their Faith in Christ, even to the death, and lost their lives in testimony of a good Conscience : or else had otherwise nobly deserved of their common Mother, by their paines in writing, or assiduity in preaching, in the defence of sacred Truth against the growth of Heresie. But afterwards the Church of Rome advanced into the roome of Christ ; and equall in her owne conceit, unto all that was called God, if not above : proclaimed them also to be Saints, which had contested in her quarrels, how unjust and trecherous soever. So that the most rebellious sort of subjects became at last most capable of this high Honour : the greatest which that Church could possibly usurpe : if at the least their opposition which they made against their Prince, might seeme to tend to the advancement of Ecclesiasticall liberty. Of which strange rancke of Saints were Anselme, a stout Champion of the Pope (though otherwise of good desert in point of learning) against his Sovereigne, in the businesse of investitures : and Becket, who so bravely bare it out against his Prince, in opposition to the Constitutions made at Clarendon. Nor to say any thing of Clement who kill'd the King of France, and Garnet of the powder-plot ; both sainted, or declared beasts, though not yet solemnly canonized. The Cardinall Bessarion, when he lived in the Court of Rome, soone found it out, that many were ascribed by that Church unto the Catalogue of the Saints, whose

Method. hist.
cap. 4.

whose lives and carriage hee disliked : quamplurimos referri inter divos, quorum vitam improbarat, as Bodinus hath it. And wee the rather may belevee Bodinus in this relation, since Pösserin, as Doctor Reynolds well observes, who hath so di- De Idol. Rom. lib. 2 cap. 5.
 ligently noted in that Author, what ever passages hee thought fit to be corrected and expunged, hath overpassed this place in silence. Nor was the Church of Rome excessive only in this kinde, to such as might plead merit in the Catholick cause, forsooth ; but even to those, of whose existence in the world, there is no small question. Witnesse Saint Longis, or Longinus, that blind souldier as they would perswade us, who with his speare did pierce our Saviours side upon the Crosse ; but after being by a drop of his precious blood, falling downe upon him, restored againe unto his sight, became a Convert first, and then afterwards a Martyr. This their Longinus, many, and those of eminent ranke, conceive to be no other then the speare it selfe ; the Greeke word λόγχη being composed into a name ; and so from ἀνὰ λόγχη, came Saint Longinus. So Bishop Jewel tells Artic. 1. Sect. 17
 us, that the Divines of late yeeres, upon the Gospell of Saint John, out of this Greeke word Lonche, which signifieth a speare, have made Longinus the blind Knight. So Bera in his Annotations on Saint John, Sed incredibilis est eorum inscitia, qui λόγχη (hastam) in ipsum percussorem transmutarunt, Longinum vocantes. So Casaubon, ὁ κρητισταίτης, in his sixteenth exercitation against the Cardinal ; de hoc Longino Cap. 95. apud veteres ne gry quidem. In comœdia Christus patiens, conversi Centurionis sit expressa mentio, sed nullus ibi Longinus memoratur, ἀνὰ τὴν λόγχην, i. e. a lancea, ita dictus. There was a souldier of that name, that suffered under Diocletian, as the Martyrology informes us ; but this is not hee. And yet it may be probable, that on him the former Legend was first grounded ; and so affabulated to the other by some ignorants, who were misguided by the name. Which Metamorphosis might well be, considering the quality of the time in which the Legends were composed, without any miracle.

(3) All this we grant, and this is nothing to the prejudice of our St. George. The Popes have beene too prodigall gall in bestowing that divine and heavenly title. What then ? Therefore shall they which were exalted to that honour, in the common suffrage of the Church, before the Popes usurped this power, bee presently degraded ? This were no equity. Farre be it from us to doe after this manner, to slay the righteous with the wicked: & that the righteous should be as the wicked, that be (I say) farre from us. This was the argument of Abraham in the behalfe of those few good and godly men which were in Sodom : and such an argument it was, that God Almighty (could not, I will not say, but sure I am he) did not answer ; but by yelding to it. Helior Bonetius, and the Author of the British History, have made a Catalogue of divers Kings ; which I perswade my selfe had never any being, unlesse in their conceits that made them ; and yet it cannot bee denyed, but there are many passages in both those stories, worthy credit ; and many Kings, whose acts and beings are not questioned. It was an heavenly Iustice in Almighty God, not to destroy the righteous with the wicked : but to be willing to reprieve that great and populous City of Sodom from destruction, for the sake onely of ten just and vertuous persons. How unjust therefore were our judgement, onely because of some few Larvae, counterfeit Saints, as wee may call them ; to prejudice so many of the true and reall, as curiosity or spleen may call in question.

(4) A second circumstance which makes the story of St. George suspected, is, that his life, according as it was related in the Legends, which were then common, hath in it many vaine and grosse absurdities ; and some such actions faste'd on him, as might farre better in appearance, sort with a Saint in Ovid, than in the credit and beleefe of holy Church. An accusation, which wee will not plead to, unlesse in saying guilty ; nor will the learned Papists traverse the enditement : So that we have on all parts, confitemur, a plaine confession of the fact. The learned and judicious Uvres plainly tels us, with what great griefe and sorrow he did commonly complaine unto himselfe, when he considered with what care and faithfulness the acts of Hannibal

*De tradend.
Discip. l. 5.*

nibal

nibal and Alexander were committed to posterity: At vero a Apostolorum, Martyrum, deniq. Divorum nostra religio, maximè tenebris fere ignorati: When in the meane time, the acts of the Apostles (understand those written by Abdias Babilonius and the like) those also of the Martyrs, and other Saints acknowledged in the Christian Church, were even quite lost amidst the darke and cloudy fogs of ignorant Superstition. Much also to this purpose the Complaint of Melchior Canus, an honest man as I conjecture, if ever any was of S. Dominicks Order. Dolenter hoc dico, multo severius à L. II. c. 6. Laetio vitas Philosophorum scriptas, quàm à Christianis vitas Sacularum; longeque incorruptius & integrius Suetonium res Caesarum exposuisse, quàm exposuerint Catholici, non res dico Imperatorum, sed Martyrum, Virginum, & Confessorum. I speak it to my griefe (saith he) that the Philosophers have had their lives more perfectly digested by Laertius, then the Saints theirs by Christians; and that Suetonius hath recorded the lives and actions of the Cesars, with more integrity, then wee have put in writing, I say not those of Princes, but even of Martyrs, Confessors, and sacred Virgins. Nor doth hee stop here, but tels us presently of those fabulous and idle writers; Ecclesia Christi cum nihil miscuit attulisse, tum in commodationis purum: That they not onely brought no profit to the Church, but a full measure of discredit. A thing which might be easily exemplified in their St. Christopher, St. Dennis, Hippolitus the Martyr; and in whom not, that ever fell into the hands of any of the Legends: but what need further prooffe when wee have confession?

(5) Three things there were, which might induce the Writers of these darke and superstitious times, to prosecute this veine of writing: not to say any thing of that which is objected commonly, viz. that they intended only, aut questum, aut errorem, either their owne profit, or the peoples ignorance. Of these, the first might bee a purpose, pious in the opinion of that age, by setting out the Histories of the Saints, with fayned miracles, and wonders which they never did: to gaine unto their shrines more multitudes of

De civit. Dei
lib. 3. cap. 4.

De trad. Dif. l. s.

Loc. q. supr.

Camuloc. Com.
lib. 11. cap. 6.

people, and a greater credit, and perhaps a noble emulation. And this in imitation of those ancient Heroes among the Gentiles; who therefore did derive their pedigree from Heaven, that so they might more constantly bee prompted to Heroicke undertakings. Præ modo animus humanus veluti divina stirpis fiduciam gerens, res magnas aggrediendas præsumat audacius, &c. As S. Justin hath it out of Varro. Possess'd with which conceit, they so compos'd the lives and actions of the Saints, as Xenophon his Cyrus, or as Virgil his Æneas; though somewhat more incongruously: not so much writing what they did, as what they thought most proper for such Saints to doe, and what they wilst'd were done. Nam quæ de Sanctis scripta sunt, præter pauca quedam, multis fœdatis sunt commentis, dum qui scribit, affectui suo indulget, & non quæ egit Divinus, sed quæ ille egisse eum vellet, exponit, &c. So Vives in the place before alleadged. The second, was a kinde of indiscretion in the choyce of argument; while such as onely medled in the Histories of the Church, chose rather to collect together, what ever fables or prodigious Acts had beene reported: than that they would be thought to leave out anything, which they had met with, eyther in discourse, or reading. This wee have touch'd at once already; nor will I more insist upon it, than in relating that of Camus: viz. Gravissimos aliquando viros, præsertim in prodigijs describendis sporcos rumores excepisse, & scriptis etiam ad posteros retulisse. The last might bee a purpose, to relate such passages, with which they saw the common people well affected; and which had found already some good acceptance with the Vulgar: who for the most part are delighted with strange reports, and matters above ordinary apprehension. Signa itaque nonnulla et prodigia Sancti quoque memoria prodiderunt, non quod ea libenter credidissent, sed ne deesse fidelium votis viderentur. And in the words immediately before, Quod vulgus sentiebant non tantum ea facile miracula credere, sed & impense flagitare. So that wee may affirme it well of those Church-Historians, what the Comedian tells us in his Prologue, of himselfe.

Pœta

*Poesia cum primum animum ad scribendum appulit
Id sibi negotij credidit solum dari;
Populo ut placerent, quas fecisset fabulas.*

Ter. in Andr.

Thus Poets when they first their mindes applie,
In looser verse to frame a Comedie;
Thinke there is nothing more for them to doe,
Than please the people which they speake unto.

There is another reason, which perhaps might well be added; which is, these large and eloquent Orations, made in the annuall commemoration of the Saints departed: wherby their Acts and vertues were set foorth by all the strength of Oratory. This Livie makes to be a cause, why the precedent acts of the noblest Romans, came so corrupted to his hands: and this wee may apply in our present argument. Vitiam memoriam funebribus laudibus reor, falsisque imaginum titulis, dum familia ad se quaque famam rerum gestarum, honorumque, fallente mendacio trahunt. De tad. 1. 1. 3. Where wee may note, that one occasion also was, false images, or rather false inscriptions on their Images: the flattering decelts of Pictures and the Carver: Inde certè singulorum gesta, & publica monumenta rerum confusa; nec quisquam equalis temporibus illis scriptor, quo satis certo autore stetur. So the Historian.

(6) To remedy this mischiefe, in which the Church and Saints had so long suffered; it was given out, by Aloysius Lippomannus then Bishop of Verona, that hee would undertake the lives and stories of the Saints; and write them so, as both the Church and they might be free from scandall. This Camus tels us, was exceeding hotly talked of at the Trent Councell; but withal he tels us this, Sed hanc mihi adhuc videre non licuit, That it never was his lucke to see it, Had he beene yet alive; he might perchance have scene what Lippomannus hath perform'd; but how farre short of his owne boasts, and the great expectation of the world; is easie to be scene by any of his Readers. He hath indeed done somewhat in it; and Bellarmino his friend (who stiles him vir De script. Eccl. in gravissimus, a Reverend man) affirms that he hath done it, (as indeed sometimes he doth) ex probatis authoribus, out of approved and trusty Authors. But certainly Clementinus hath more necerely hit the marke than any other: by whom we are informed, that almost all which had beene done by Lippomanus in this argument, was but the publishing of the former Fables of the Legend, under the names of ancient writers; bestowing on them onely a new dresse, and a fayrer Title-Page. Cumque aurea quondam Lombardica historia fabella, toti jam mundo fiteant; novo artificio sub praeextu quasi veterum & Græcorum, eadem fabula à Lippomano & Suario, quam antea propter actores explosam putant, rursus in theatrum adfertur. So he; and for the generall, I perswade my selfe, he hath not wrong'd them: although in this particular of St. George, they have not deserved it. For whereas Lippomanus hath delivered us the story of our Martyr in two peeces; one written by Pasicates, as they tell us, the other done by Metaphrastes: of that ascribed to Metaphrastes, there is no question to be made, but it was his doing. And for Pasicates, if that were his name, the history entituled to him, is extant in an old Greeke Manuscript, in the Library of Oxon. but of these Authors, more heereafter.

In Proem.

Not. Alt. l. 3.

(7) By this we may perceive, how great a room uncertaine, and sometimes prophane relations, have taken up in Ecclesiasticall History: that part thereof, especially, which treateth of the Lives and Acts of Saints and Martyrs. A thing which might the more be wondred at, if the affayres of State, and secular occurrences, had not a little also of the same leaven, moulded with them. Livie assures us, that the affayres of Italy, before the walles of Rome were layed, Poeticis magis decora fabulis, quam incorruptis rerum gestarum monumentis tradebantur; Were more set out by fabulous traditions, than any warrantable evidence of truth. Gellius is bold to give Herodotus, whom Tully calls Historie Patrem, the stile of Fabler, (Fabulator): Fl. Vopiscus more tartly, as more generally, neminem Historicorum non aliquid mentisum esse; that there was never any History without some falsehoods. What then? Is therefore all false, which we find in Dionysius of the Kings of Alba? Or shall we think that Xerxes, and the other Persian Kings never made any expedition into Greece? Or that no credit may bee given unto prophane and civill stories? This were a course, not only to make question of the times before us, whether we had Grandfathers or not, or any Ancestors: but also to instruct posterity to make like doubts of us, and of those publique actions which are now upon the stage. Aeneas is not therefore to be thought a Knight of Faery Land, the issue of an idle braine, a fiction, or non ens, because the Poets have exprest him with some additions more then reall. Nor may wee thinke that there was never such a Towne or Siege as that of Troy; no Priamus, no Agamemnon, no Achilles, because the Father of the Muses, Homer, hath made more of it in his most accomplisht Poem; than may perhaps agree in al the parts & members of it, with the truth of story. It is reported by S. Gregory of Tours, that Dionysius Bishop of the Parisians, the now St. Denys of the Frenchmen, as I take it, (for I beleve not that their Denys was the Areopagite) did suffer Martyrdome under Decius. B. Dionysius Parisiorum Episcopus, diversis pro Christianismo affectus pœnis, presentem vitam gladio imminente finivit; as he there hath it. This I perswade my selfe wee may beleve without much danger, although wee give at all no further credit to the Legend: where we are told how farre he ran after his Execution, having his head betweene his hands. And we may well beleve that Simon Eyre was Major of London, that Crispin and his brother Crispianus, were both Martyrs, which is true in story, although we credit not those things which are reported of them, to the honour of the Gentle-crafts forsooth, in idle Pamphlets. But what need more be said? Hee that condemnes the histories and lives of Saints, because of some untruths which are extant in them, may by the same reason call in question all antiquity, and make some scruple, whether or not, there ever was a time called Yesterday. Denomination, according to the rules of Logicke, takes after the more sound and excellent parts of the thing to be denominated: and therefore wee should rather judge those those stories to bee true, because of many certaine truths; than reckon them as false, because of some suspected falsehoods which are noted in them.

We

Hist. Angl. l. 3

L. I. de gestis
Angl.

Loc. cit. supr.

(8) For proesse of which, and that the intermixture of vaine fables ought not to be a prejudice to the truth of story; wee cannot meet with more faire instances, than here at home. Polydore tels us, that the British Bards and Chroniclers had made their Arthur not much unlike Orlando, one of the twelve Peeres so much talk'd of: the stories of them both, equally fabulous and foolish. De hoc (Arthuro) propter ingentes pariter corporis vires, atque animi virtutes, posteritas ea forme predicavit, qua de Rolando memoria nostra apud Italos decantantur. And to that purpose Malmesbury, Hic ille est Arthurus de quo Britonum nuga hodieq. delirant. Caxton hath made a volume of his noble Acts, and of the Acts of his so memorated Knights of the Round Table; collected out of all the vaine reports which the world made of him. And in the Spanish Romances it is delivered, that after his great battell fought with Mordred, hee was turned into a Crow, and that he is expected daily by his people; and that for this cause, England is so full of Crowes; it being of a truth (say they) that since that time, no Englishmen darst ever kill them. What then? Shall wee conclude that therefore there is nothing true of Arthur; that therefore there was no such man? or that he was a larva, a fictitious person, an idoll, or a tragelaphus, as they have pleased to call S. George? This were to vilifie the credit of our best Historians, who tell us of twelve notable and famous overthrowes which he gave the Saxons. This were to frustrate altogether that ample testimony given of him by the Monke of Malmesbury aforesaid; who calls him the support and stay of his expiring Nation. Dignus plane (saith he) quem non fallaces somniarent fabula, sed veraces predicarent historia: quippe qui labantem patriam diu sustinuerit, infractaq. civium mentes ad bellum acuerit. The like may also be affirmed of Sir Guy of Warwick, whom in our English Pamphlets we have made enamoured of a faire Lady named Phyllis: For love of whom (or rather upon whose displeasure) he became a Knight adventurer;

venturer ; famous in forreigne Countries for his brave exploits against the enemies of our Religion : not to say any thing of the Dun-Cow of Dunsmore-heath, and others of that nature. And yet for certaine, such a man as Guy there was, a noble Champion of the English against their enemies the Danes : and of eternall memory for his fight and vanquishment of the Giant Colebrond. This Camden testifies, and with him others of our Antiquaries ; no friends to fond traditions and ungrounded fables. Thus have they also dealt with Beauvoys Eare of Southampton, at the coming of the Normans. Vir bellica laude florentissimus, as Camden calls him, Camd. in Belgic. a man of rare abilities in the Arts of warre ; and one that gave the Normans a great overthrow in the battell of Cardiffe anno 1070. Yet look upon him in those idle Rhythmes which are extant of him, his many victories upon the Saracens ; his prosperous loves with the Lady Iosian, the Soldans daughter ; his fight with Ascapart, and the entertaining of him for his Page ; his good Horse Arundel, from whence the ancient Castle of that name, must needs bee call'd so ; and other such like follies : and then what shall wee finde in the whole story but infinite absurdities ? So true is that of Camden, Dum Monachi fabellis fittis, & commentis, (Beuossium hunc) iudarunt celebrare, fortissima ejus facta crassis occultarunt tenebris. And to this purpose Millos in the Catalogue of Honour. This is that *Beuoy*s of Southampton, " whose valour was so great, that the Monks thought they " could not extoll him sufficiently, unlesse they besmeared " his praises with fictions and fables. The like may also bee affirmed of Charlemagne, and the twelve Peeres, and others so much celebrated in the ancient Romances ; that they were Counterfeits and larvæ, and what not : if so be that kinde of reasoning be of any force against S. George.

(9) As little able are the vaine dreames and practises of Hereticks, to beare downe the truth, as are the fictions of the Legendaries, or such traditions as have found acceptance with the vulgar. It is conceived that Peters trauailes, or the Itinerarium Petri ascribed to Clement, was composed by Hereticks : certaine it is, that it is branded in Gelasius Canon,

Canon, for Apocryphall. Yet questionlesse, this were an Argument not worthy any answer, but contempt and laughter; should any hence inferre, that therefore St. Peter never cros'd any Seas, or made any journeyes for the enlargement of the faith. Pope Leo is reported in the Golden Legend, to have beene an Arian; and to have borne great stomacke against S. Hilary of Poitiers, for his Orthodoxie: which likely, was devised of him by the Arians, for the reputation of their cause. But I should reckon him of more Faith, than Charity, that would beleewe it on such weake and faulty grounds. In like maner: The Fathers of the sixth Councell of Carthage, among whom was Saint Austin, found by much industry and searce, that they of Rome, for the advancement of their pride and affected tyranny, had falsified the Canons of the Great Councell held at Nice. Should therefore they have publicly abjured that famous Councell? Or judge the whole Hereticall, because one passage of it was corrupted? This had beene such a maner of proceeding, as might have made these Reverend Fathers, for ever odious, and their memories condemned in all publike monuments. They therefore made enquire at Alexandria and Constantinople, for the true Canons of that Councell: and having found them out, without impeaching in the least manner, the honour of that famous Synod, returned such answer to the Pope, as his fact deserved. This also ought to be our method in the examining of Stories; not to suspect, and much lesse to condemne the whole, because of some one part corrupted and unsavory: but rather to cut off the part infected, and to cast it from us, ne pars sincera trahatur, that so it be no prejudice or danger to the rest of it, which continueth sound. So shall wee perfectly make good that saying of St. Paul, commended to us in this present businesse by Gelasius: viz. Omnia probate, &c. Tria all things, but hold fast that only which is good.

(10) To draw unto an end, and to applie this whole discourse unto the present argument, we conclude it thus. Suppose St. Longesse to be false, and counterfeit, (not to say any thing of those, who are suspected onely, but not so probably whole

probably convicted of the like intrusion :) and that the Pope hath beene too prodigall of those Celestiall honours, of which he hath usurped a disposing power. Yet this, as I conceive it, no prejudice unto Saint George ; who was acknowledged for a Saint, before the Popes usurped that lawlesse power, of doing any thing in Heaven : before those Counterfeits (if such they be) had any place, in the common Calendar. We grant, that many of the lives of Saints, are fabulously and vainely written; and that scarce any of that sacred company hath suffered more extremely in the ordinary Legends, than our blessed Martyr. But yet wee cannot yeeld, that therefore there was no such man, because his Acts are misreported. Were this an argument of force, we must not only empty heaven of many of its Saints, but must correct our Chronicles, & raze out many of those famous Princes which are mentioned in them. How much more equall is the resolution of Du Moulin, touching St. Francis of Affise in Italie, the Founder of the Friers-Minors, called vulgarly, Franciscans : which is, that he doth verily beleave, that such a man there was, though in his Legend, many things are attributed to him, voyd of sense. Nous ne doutons point, que Francois d'Affise, inventure et Patron de l'ordre des Cordeliers (so the French call them) n'ait este. Mais sa Legende, & les Chroniques de St. Francois, luy attribuent mille actions desitmes de sons commun. So hee, and these his words are next in order unto those, where he accuseth our Saint George of Arianisme : from which, by this his owne rule, (so soone did hee forget himselfe) we may most easily acquite him. And last of all, we grant that many of the lives of Saints have been abused by Hereticks; and that S. George hath suffered from them in his History, as much as any : but yet we must not yeeld, that therefore he was such a one, as Hereticks have trifled of him. It is confessed by Doctor Reynolds, one of the greatest adversaries of Saint George, that many of the Saints had beene thus injured : and that Gelasius therefore might more easily be deceived, in giving credit to the story of this our Martyr. At vero progressu temporis passio Georgij a sectatoribus eius composita, multis sic falsis, ut Gelasius De Idol. Rom. lib. 1 cap. 3.

Resp. ad Card.
Peron. l. 2. c. 5.

/ additi.

etiam;

etiam, tametsi fraudem hanc olfaceret, ipsum putaret nihilominus sanctum fuisse Martyrem: nec sine probabili ratione, quandoquidem aliorum qui verè Sancti extitissent, passiones, similem in modum ab hæreticis mendaciter scripta essent. If so, then either was Gelasius a very dunce, that could not see so farre into the couzinage of his owne times, as Doctor Reynolds: or else St. George was most unlucky, to have his Story onely questioned, and all the rest, no lesse suspected, passe for currant.

CHAP.

CHAP. V.

(1) Prodenbeed trunks the ground of fabulous reports: (2) The privilege of two French Churches, and the Fables thence arising. (3) The Barons case of Galcoygne, (4) Saint Georges killing of the Dragon how farre it may be justified. (5) The Portraiture of Constantine. (6) The Order of the Dragon, and of Saint Michael. (7) Saint George how pictured commonly: and what it signifieth. (8) The memorable story of Saint Georges Horse. (9) The picture of Saint George how made a fable: and by whom (10) The entertainment of it in the Church of Rome (11) The reformation of the Missall. (12) A small answer to all those on the part of Calvin.

(1)

Thus have we made reply to such generall arguments, as might be urged on the behalfe of Calvin, against the story of Saint George: as namely, the vaine and fabulous tales which are frequent of him, and extant in his Legend; the dreames, and practises of Heretickes, by which the lives of Saints have beene corrupted, and that unlawfull power which they of Rome have so abused, in filling of the Calendar, with wicked men, and fained persons. Wee next descend to that particular exception, which is made against him; viz. That so much celebrated act of his encounter with the Dragon: which being not upon record in true antiquity, hath made some thinke, that Persus in the Poet hath onely changed his name; and by the change, possessed a place among the Saints. To this, we have already answered in the generall: and in particular, reply; That true indeed it is, no such exploit of his, as the encounter with the Dragon, is to be found in true antiquity. Yet we must say withall, that true antiquity doth give us such a ground of this report; as may perhaps a little qualifie the boldnesse of the Legendario, though:

though not quite excuse it. The tale of Perseus, hath some good ground in truth of story ; although exprest Poetically, and with liberall additions : so also hath the Fable of Medusa, and her enchanting hayres ; than which almost nothing lesse probable. What fiction more unlikely than the tale of Phaeton, and that great conflagration of the world by his presumptuous undertaking of his fathers Chariot. Yet Bergomensis and other Authours of good credit doe report ; That under an Egyptian King so called, a great part of the world was destroyed by Fire , and such a generall heate and drowth upon the rest,

*Vt neq, quae possot terris inducere nubes,
Tunc habuit ; nos quos, caelo dimitteret imbres,*

That Iove for wasted clouds did seeke in vaine,
To shade, or coole the scorched earth with raine.

In like manner, as dealt the ancient Poets with such passages of story, as were most serviceable to their purpose : so dealt the Legendaries, which are Church-Poets, with the lives and history of the Saints. Something there was which they had heard of, which might occasion them to ramble from the truth ; and please themselves in their owne inventions : wherein, as commonly the people reported fabulously of true matters ; so they, the Legendaries, extoll'd those fables, as a truth.

(2) Two fairer instances of which, we can hardly meet with, than two especiall priviledges of two Churches in the Realme of France, and the vaine fables thence arising. At the first entrance of a new Bishop into the Bishoprick of Orleans, he hath a priviledge of setting free any one prisoner of the Goale ; for what great crime soever hee doth stand committed. A priviledge conferr'd upon them (as Du Chesne hath told us) first in the person of St. Aignan once Bishop of this City ; for his exceeding paines and care in the defence thereof, against Attila the Hunne. But if we will believe the people, and the ordinary fables which are ground-ded

ded on it, we must take it thus. At the first entrance of St. Agrippinus into the Towne, hee made request to Agrippinus then Governour, that for his sake hee would set open all the Goales, and release the prisoners: Ut omnes quos pro varijs criminibus penalis carcer detinebat inclusos, in suis introitus gratiam redderet absolutos; (saith the latter story. Vpon deniall of this suite, a stone fells presently upon his head; from whence none knew, but as it was conceiv'd, from heaven: wounded and terrified wherewith, hee grants the Bishop his desire, is suddenly made whole; and ever since the Custome hath continued in full force and vertue. In like sort, the selfe same priviledge was granted by King Dagobert the first (hee began his reigne anno 632) unto the Canons of the Church of Nostre Dame, in Roan of Normandy; Andre du Chesne Antiq. l. 7. c. 2. and since confirmed by his successors. A priviledge confirm'd upon them, as that age and the rest that followed were prone to superstitious bounries in memory of S. Romain (whose Festivall is here observ'd with all solemnity upon the 23 day of October) not long before Archbishop of that City. But if wee will beleve the people, and the common fables, we must take it thus. There was a poisonous Dragon which had done much harme unto this Province, whom they had tried by many meanes to make away, but none prospered. At last, St. Romain then Archbishop of Roan, accompanied with a Murderer, and Theefe, whose lives were forfeit to the Law, undertakes the enterprise. Vpon the first sight of the Dragon, the Theefe according to his custome stole away: the Murderer more hardened in his trade, goeth forwards with him. To make short worke, The Dragon layeth aside his fury, and patiently submits himselfe unto that godly Prelate: who binding him about the neck with his stole, or tippet, delivereth him unto the Murderer, and leades him prisoner unto Roan. This wondrous accident is said to happen on an holy Thursday: and that St. Andoin or Owen, who next succeeded in that Church, in memory thereof obtain'd this priviledge; that from thence forwards the Chanons of Our Ladies, should every holy Thursday have the releasing of any Murderer, derer, whom themselves would choose, I say of any Murderer; Theeves not being capable at all of any mercy: because (say they) the Theefe which was to have attended in that service, stole away.

(3) So farre the story, as I was told by mine Host at Rouen; but for the priviledge, it is still in practise, and famous by a great and memorable triall, not long since hapning; related to me by a Gentleman of good account, and a practitioner in the Parliamentarie Court in that City. The case is this. Not much above some twelve yeeres since, a Noble-man of Gascoigne took occasion to kill his wife; which done he fled into Normandie: and having first acquainted the Canons of the Church of Nostre Dame with his desires; put himselfe to the sentence of the Court, and is adjudged unto the Wheele. Ascension day immediately comming on, the Canons chalenged him for theirs: and the chiefe Judges, according to the custome, caused him to bee delivered. But on the other side, it was pleaded by the Normans, that the benefit of this priviledge belonged only to the Natives of that Province; and they pleaded with such violence, that the poore Baron was againe committed to his irons, till the Qu. Mother had wooed and wonne the people, pro ea saltem vice, to admit of his reprivall.

Epist. ad Trial.

(4) This story of St. Romain's Dragon, in which there is no passage true; conducts me on, unto St. George; of whose encounter with the Dragon there may be somewhat said to qualifie the matter; though not to justifie it altogether. For by the Dragon if wee understand the Devill, that old malicious Serpent, (τὸν ὄφιν ἀρχέοντα, as Ignatius calls him) and by the combat betwixt our blessed Martyr and that Monster, those many snares and baits which by the Devill were provided to intrap him: we may soon find how and in what respect St. George his fighting with the Dragon may bee justified; An exposition of that fabulous text occurring in the Legend, not forced unnaturally; but such as doth agree, as with the truth of story, so also with the words and meanings of some Authors, which have written of our Martyr. Certaine I am that Metaphrastes in an Encomion or Anniversary

Anniversary Oration, made in the memory and commendation of our Saint; doth not allude unto it only, but affirmeth it. For thus that Author, speaking of those severall baits which had beene laid for the inveigling of this blessed man of God; the kingdomes of the world, and the glories of them, the frownes and anger of the Prince, the terrours both of death and tortures: speaking I say of these, and how that all of them, and other the devices of that old Serpent, were by that noble Champion frustrate and deluded; hee concludes it thus. Licetbas igitur videre astutissimum Draconem, adversus carnem & sanguinem gloriari solitum, statimq; & sese efferentem; à juvene uno illisum, & ita despectum atq; confusum, ut quid ageret non haberet. So hee; and this perhaps might give the hint to that report of his encounter with the Dragon. Which I the rather doe beleeeve, partly upon the credit of the Author called Discipulus de temporibus In festo S. Geor. / and who reckoning up the severall priviledges of St. George, makethis the second, that he had killed the Dragon, i. e. the Devill: secundo quod Draconem vicit, qui significat Diabolam. But I am moved hereto more specially, because Hospinian having in briefe related the constant sufferings of our Martyr, concludes at last, that such his noble constancy was the occasion of that fable which after was reported of him by Iacobus de Voragine, touching the killing of the Dragon. For so Hospinian, hac autem illius constantia & fortitudo in vestra fabula isti locum dedit, qua legitur apud Iacobum de Voragine, &c. And this may also seeme to be intended by Hermannus Schedel, in his work entituled Chronica Chronicorum; where he doth joine together the Martyrdome of our St. George, and his encounter with the Dragon; both as it were one act or undertaking, Et velut alter Curtius Rex sextus Romanus, vel Codrus Rex Atheniensium, pro patria liberatione sese internecioni ad Draconis occisionem, & martyrii tolerantiam, dedit: as hethere hath it. Lib. de festis. pag. 240.

(5) For farther prooffe of which, and that this exposition on that fabulous text, as before I call'd it, is not unnaturally forced, but suitable unto the truth of story, and in all likelihood agreeable to their intents, who gave the first hint,

G

*Euseb de vita
Constant. l. 3. c. 3*

hint, and occasion to the fables in the Legends : let us behold a while the portraiture of Constantine the great, erected in the same figure in a manner, and to the same intent and purpose. Of him wee need not make report, how great a victory he had against that enemy of mankind, in his promoting of the faith ; and ruining those Heathenish Temples consecrated to impiety and the Devill. After which glorious conquest, and the establishing of true Religion in all the quarters of his Empire, ἐν γραφῇς ἐψηλοτάτω πίνακι, &c. hee caused his portraiture to bee erected up on high, in a faire table for that purpose, and at the entrance of his Palace, that so it might be obvious to the eye of every passer. Over his head the Crosse, that venerable signe of mans redemption : and underneath his feet, that great and working enemy of man, the Devill, cast downe into the lowest deepes, under the figure of a Dragon: τὸν δ' ἐχθρὸν καὶ πολέμιον θῆρα, τὸ δ' ἐκκλησίαν τοῦ θεοῦ διατρίψας Ἀδριανὸν πολιορκήσαντα τυραννίδος, καὶ βυδοῦ φερόμενον, ποιήσας ἐν δράκοντι μορφῇ. The reason why hee caused himselfe so to bee portraied, to shew, no doubt, how great and notable an overthrow hee had given the Devill : but why hee made the Devill in the liknesse of a Dragon, was in allusion to the Scriptures, where he is call'd a Serpent ; and in the Revelation, more particularly, a Dragon. So witnesseth Eusebius in the words immediatly following, δράκοντα γὰρ αὐτὸν (the Devill) καὶ σάβλον ἔσθιν, ἐν προφητῇς διὰ βίβλοις ἀνηρόδω τὰ λόγια.

(6) To the same purpose also, and on occasion not much different, at the least as he conceived it, did Sigismund the Emperour, and King of Hungary, erect an order of Knighthood, which he entituled, Of the Dragon. He had bin fortunat in many severall battels against the greatest enemies of Christ, the Turkes : and he had also labored with much diligence to ruine and suppress the Hussites, the greatest enemies of the Roman Church then being, of the which hee was Protector. This last, not onely by persecutions privately, and force of armes in publique ; but by procuring the two Councils of Basil and Constance, to bee assembled ; where the poore Hussites were condemned, their cause unheard ;

heard; & the chiefe Patrons of their cause adjudg'd unto the fire. Proud of his fortunate successe in these great enterprizes, he instituted this his military order of the Dragon; so called because his Knights did beare for their Device, a Dragon falling headlong: pour tesmoigner que par son moyen le Schisme et l'heresie, Dragons de vorans de la religion, avoyent esté vaincus, et supplantez. And this (saith he that made the book entituled Les estats du Monde, translated since by Grimston) to testifie that by his meanes, the Dragons of Heresie and Schisme, which otherwise had destroyed religion, and devoured the Church; were vanquished and suppressed. Much like to this in the Device, is the French Order dedicated to Saint Michael, instituted by King Louis the II. not long after, anno viz. 1469. Vnto the collar of which Order, there is fastned the picture of S. Michael the Archangell, combating with the Dragon of the internall deepes: aureaque imagine S. Michaelis Draconem infernalem proster- De origine Monentis, pedes insigniente. So saith Hospinian. But this in resemblance rather to the encounter of St. Michael with the Dragon in the Apocalypse. nash. l. cap. 59.

(7) With these the portraiture of Constantine above mentioned, and the two military Orders of S. Michael and the Dragon; St. George, as hee is commonly expressed in picture, holdeth good proportion and correspondence. His picture, as in the present times we use to draw it, but ab initio non fuit sic, it was not thus from the beginning: For I have read it in the life of Theodorus Syceotes, commonly called Archimandrita, or Chiefe-Abbot, borne in the time of the Emperour Iustinian: that then S. George was only pictured as a faire young man richly arrayed, and of an hayre somewhat enclining unto yellow. For so Elpidia doth describe him in the relation of her dreame, to this her Grandchild Theodorus, as Surius tels us, out of one George a Priest, the Scholler of this Abbot. Videbam, fili mi dulcissime (these are old Grandams words) adulescentem valde formosum, splendidis vestimentis ornatum, aureaque fulgentem comam; & illi similem, quem pro S. Georgio ejus historia cernimus. Thus was hee pictured, anciently. But in the mid-

Tom. 2. in vita
Theod. Archim.
p. 37.

Cap. 5. Sect. 3.

In Annot. ad
Ro. Mar. Ap. 23Praelec. in A-poc. 155.

L. 1. c. 5. Sect. 22

dle times, he was presented to the common view more like a man at armes, mounted upon a Courser; a young maid kneeling by him, and a fierce Dragon thrust through with a Speare, gasping for life: just as we see him painted (but that there is no mention of the yong maid) on our common Signe-posts. A picture which in the darker and more ignorant times, was thought to represent that story which was then published in the Legend; and which, since it hath beene otherwise resolved by the learned of both parties, that it did only represent some mystery or allegory; hath not a little exercised their wits and fancies. Perkins will have it (as before we noted) to bee in former times a representation of our Saviour, who vanquished the Devill for the deliverance of his Church; in which conceit many Divines had concurred likewise, which wee then noted also out of Charles Stephanus. Baronius doth conceive it to bee the picture of some State or Country petitioning (according to the custome of those times) the ayd and helping-hand of so great a Saint against the violence of the Devill. In virgine n. illa typus exprimitur (more majorem) provincia vel civitatis alienius, qua adversus diaboli vires tanti martyris impleret auxilium. Villavincensius and Hyperius have applyed it to the civill Magistrate, whose principall endeavours ought to aime at this, that they defend the Church from the covetous tyranny of the Oppressour, the old Serpent. Doctor Reynolds, as he prefers this last conceit before that of Baronius; so doth he seeme to prize his owne, both before this, or any other. With him the meaning of the emblem (or picture emblematicall) must bee this; that all true Christians, whom the Apostle calls Gods husbandry, might learne hereby how much it doth concerne them to make warre against the Dragon, and to destroy him with the sword of the Spirit. Ut sciant omnes Christiani, quos nos pro Dei appellat Apostolum, I Cor. 3. militandum sibi adversus Draconem, Apocal. 12. eumque Dei gladio confodendum. So hee in his pralections on the Apocrypha; and the same words almost, repeated in his book de Rom. Idololatria. For my part, I rather choose (for why in such variety may not I also also assume the liberty of conjecture) to make it, at the least in part, historical, as being thus contriv'd of purpose, in those times, and by those men which most affectionally were devoted to our Martyr, to publish to posterity how bravely he resell'd the Devil, how constantly hee persevered in the profession of his faith; the whole Church praying with him, and kneeling (like the Virgin) by him, in that holy action; that G. O. D. would give him strength to subdue that enemy, the Dragon. Any, or all of these may perhaps be tolerable; and so no question but they are, as conceits and fancies: without the least prejudice to the truth of story. Historical truths (the substance still remaining what at first it was) are many times, either impaired or improved by fictions, allegorical applications, and illusions. Examples of the which are infinite and obvious, but none more notable then the frequent allegories made upon Paradise by the Fathers, which yet conclude not any thing against the locall being of it.

(8) How long the picture of St. George hath been commended to us in this Knightly forme, I cannot easily determine; only I will be bold to say, that it is not very moderne, or of small standing in the Church, as may be gathered out of the History of Nicophorus Gregoras. This Author was by birth of Greece, and wrote the History of that declining Empire; beginning at the yeere 1200, and ending it anno 1344, about which time it is conceived, that he was gathered unto his fathers. In the eighth booke (hee wrote eleven in all) there is a memorable story of S. Georges Horse, which for the rareness of it, and that it is so proper to the cause in hand, it shall not grieve me to relate, nor any Reader to peruse. Primo Quadragesimo Sabbato, cum postridie orthodoxorum Imperatorum & Patriarcharum proclamanda esset memoria, tum quoque Theodorus Logotheta generalis, a vespere ad nocturnam sacra illa de more accessit. Medio vero sub nocte, me astante, et Gregoriam audiente, quidam ab Imperatore adesset, novum illi nuncium apportans, &c. On the first Saturday in Lent, the Commemoration of such godly Emperours and Patriarchs as had departed in the Faith, be-addit.

Bellar. de
Scrip. Eccl.

ing the morrow after to bee solemnized ; it pleased the Lord high Chancellour Theodorus (for so on the authority of Maurus in his Græco-Barbara, I thinke good to render Λογοςδότης : I say it pleased him) to be present with us, according to the custome, at those night-watches. About the time of midnight, I standing neare him, and hearkning to divine Seruice, a Messenger in all the haste came to him from Andronicus the Elder, then our Emperour, telling this strange newes, and desiring his opinion. But now (saith hee) when the Souldiers of the Guard, (Milites Imperatorij) were going to their rest, there was a fearfull neighing, heard so upon the sudden, that it made all of us amazed ; the rather, because there were not any Horses then about the Court, all of them carried in the evening far off unto their Stables. This tumult not yet quieted, another noise of the same kind, but greater then the former, was heard unto the Emperours Chamber, who presenly dispatch'd a Servant to enquire into the matter. The servant did as was commanded, Sed nihil audiuit aliud, nisi ab equo in quodam palatii pariete ante victricis deipara sacellum, quem Paulus olim pictor præstantissimus effinxisset, D. Georgium pulcherrime sustinentem, esse edium, &c. The servant did as was commanded, but heard no other noise than what did seeme to him to issue from the picture of a certaine horse, bearing S. George upon his back ; which Paul the famous Painter had long since painted on that part of the Pallace-wall which is close by our Ladies Chappell. This is (saith he) the message which I am commanded to deliver, and to acquaint you also, that his Majesty desires your present counsell. Ad hæc Logotheta jocatus, Gratulor tibi (inquit) Imperator futuros triumphos, &c. quibus auditis, At tu quidem inquit Imperator isto responso exhilarandi mei gratias, rem ignorare visus es: Ego autem dicam tibi. Nam ut patres nostri nobis tradiderunt, equus iste alias ad eundem modum hinnit, cum Baldwinus Latinorum Princeps, à patre nostro pulsus urbem amissurus esset. The Chancellour repairing upon these summons to the Emperour, found him exceedingly

ceedingly disquieted ; and therefore sportively accoasting him, I doe my Leige, said hee, congratulate those noble triumphes which the so lusty neighings of St. George's horse portend unto you. To whom the Emperour replyed, It seemes my Lord, that you of purpose to compose my thoughts, and make mee merry ; will not take notice of the matter : but I am able to instruct you in it. For I have heard upon good credit, that this picture of an horse neighed formerly, as now it did ; just when that Baldwin Emperour of the Latines in Constantinople, was beleagured by my father, and the City taken. So farre the story. All wee will note from hence, is this, that Baldwin mentioned in the History, began his reigne anno 1227 ; and that St. George, both in his time, and long before, was painted mounted on his Horse ; which is as much as I desire, for my present purpose.

(9) Saint George thus pictured, cyther by way of Hieroglyphicke, as some conceive it ; or of Historicall representation, as I rather should conjecture : it was not long before the vulgar, οἱ πολλοὶ καὶ φοβηκότες, as Aristotle calls them ; had improved it into a Fable. And now St. George must be ennobled for the killing of a Dragon, which hee never saw ; and ransoming of King Nemo's Daughter, for in the Legends there is nothing told us of his name. Iust as upon the post-fact, the Normans fram'd that doughty tale of Saint Romanus and the Dragon ; or those of Orleans, the no lesse memorable story of Saint Aignans stone. Which being so, the people thus affected, by reason of those pictures, which did then commonly expresse St. George ; and the composers of the Legends, willing to countenance those fictions, which were already of good credit with the people ; it became generally received. The rather, because the Author of the Legend, then in most esteeme, was not of ordinary ranke : a man of speciall eminence for his Workes, & Learning, Archbishop of a chiefe city in Italy, and of good credit for a long time together in the Court of Rome : I meane Jacobus de Voragine, whom in this case, the Cardinall Baronius justly blames, for making that an History, or a Fable rather, which was in all Antiquity, intended onely for an embleme. In nullis enim quæ recensuimus S. Georgij actis antiquis, quicquam legitur ejusmodi; (viz. the killing of the Dragon, &c.) sed à Jacobo de Voragine absque ulla majorum auctoritate; ea ad historiam referuntur; quæ potius in imagine illius typum exprimunt, &c. And it is also worth our noting, that this invention of the Dragon is proper only to the Latines. For though the portraiture of St. George bee still made amongst those of Greece, as it is commonly with us of the Western Churches; yet there is nothing to be found touching the story of the Dragon in any of their Authors that I have met withall in my present search. All I shall adde is this (which may perchance be else objected) that De Vogue did frame his Legend according to the common fame, and the expression of St. George in common pictures; and not the pictures made according to the fancy and tradition of the Legend. For it appeares out of Nicephorus above mentioned, that this our Martyr had bene portraied in this fashion long time before the Latines were expuls'd Constantinople, which hapned in the yeece 1260. Whereas Jacobus de Voragine began to be of credit, at the soonest, anno 1278, and as it is conceiv'd by others, not till the yeece 1290. which before we noted.

Annot. in Rom.
Mar. Apr. 23.

(10) But to proceed; the Legend thus composed, and by such a man, and so agreeable unto the humour of the people; no marvell if it found a willing entertainment in the publique Service of the Church: so that in tract of time the Legend or historia Lombardica, for so the Author calls it, became a principall part in the Roman Breviary. Bona Brivarianus pars, quod quidem adlectionem montium attinet, ex Lombardica desumpta est, licet verbis paululum immutatis. So saith Wicelinus: & we well know how justly he might say it, as in the generall, so also in the particular of St. George. For in an old booke which I have long had in my custody, entituled Hora B. Mariae, Secundum usum Sarum: We have this history of S. George, and of his Dragon, thus framed into an Anthem; and as it there appeareth, appointed to be sung on his publique Festivall; the Anthem this.

O George.

*O Georgi Martyr inclyte, Te decet laus & gloria,
Prædicatorum militum;
Per quem puella regia, (Existens in tristitia Coram Dracone pessimo)
Salvata est. Ex animo Te rogamus corde intimo,*

*Ut cunctis cum fidelibus Cæli jungamur civibus, Nostris ablatis sordibus:
Et simul cum latitia Tecum simus in gloria;
Nostraq; reddant labia Laudes Christo cum gratia:
Cui sit honos in secula.*

George, holy Martyr, praise and fame Attend upon thy glorious name,
Advanc'd to Knightly dignity;
The Daughter of a King by thee
(As she was making grievous moane,
By a fierce Dragon, all alone)
Was freed from death. Thee we intreat
That in Heaven we may have a seat;
And being wash'd from every staine,
May there with all the faithfullaigne:
That we with thee together may Sing gladly many a sacred Lay,
The gracious throne of Christ before,
To whom be praise for evermore.

(11) So was it in our Ladyes Horary, or horarium, according to the use of Sarum; and so no question in other of their publique Service-Bookes, untill the reformation of Religion began in Germany by Luther, made those of Rome bethinke themselves, and make some necessary reformation also, in such particulars as were most scandalous and offensive. A reformation not only of their manners, which since the difference began, have beene strangely mended; nor of their Doctrine onely, which since the opposition, hath been wondrously altered and refined: but also of their Breviaries, of their Missals, and other parts of their publique Liturgies. A matter first attempted, at the beginning of the breach, by Pope Clement the seuenth, who using in it the assistance

vicelinus in E-pist. dedicat.

stance of Franciscus Quignonius (hee was then Cardinall of Santa Croce) lett in them onely the histories of some few Saints of either sexe, of which there was lesse scruple; cashiering all the rest, which gave occasion of offence. Vnde non imprudenter scribit Clemens (sept.) Pont. Rom. ad ius opera Franc. Quignoni, qui historiolas aliquot Sanctorum utriusque sexus, cum Christo in Paradiso conregnantium, succincte iuxta & eruditè describit, inque Rom. Breviarium inseri curavit. Omnes calumniantibus ansam amputans, qui fabulas non historias in Templis recitari clamabant. So mine Author hath it. Afterwards, a more exact and perfect reformation of the Missall and the Breviary was resolved upon in the Trent-Councell; together with an Index to bee made of all such Bookes as were thought fit either to be prohibited, or noted with a Deleatur. But by the hasty breaking up of that Conventicle, (for so the French King called it in his letters to the Prelates there assembled) the whole businesse was referred unto the Pope: by his unerring spirit to bee determined and concluded. Præcipit S. Synodus, ut quicquid ab illis (to whom the matter was committed) præstitum esset, Sanctissimo Rom. Pont. exhibeatur: ut ejus judicio atq; auctoritate terminetur, & evulgetur: So was it done accordingly: the Missals, Breviaries, Rituals, Pontificals, Catechismes, Diurnals, and all the severall Horaries, Officiums, and such like Manualls belonging to our Ladies service; being corrected first by Pope Pius Quintus, and after recognized by Clement of that name the eighth. The use we make hereof is this, that those to whom that weighty businesse was committed, have left S. George his ancient place in the Roman Liturgies, accounting him as one of those, quicum Christo regnant, which now reigne with Christ in Paradise; and that they have exploded out of their Missals and their Breviaries, the story of the Dragon onely as being fabulous and offensive.

(12) And now what is there else, which any one of Calvins party, any of those which have denied St. George a being, can further question? It is alleadged by Doctor Cracanthorpe, to prove St. George to be non homo, an allegory,

ric, and a symbol; that even Baronius doth confesse it: and for a further prooff, Baronius is produced to tell us on his knowledge, Picturam Georgij qua eques armatus effingitur, &c. That viz. the ordinary pictures of Saint George have more in them of an embleme, than an History. What then? Baronius doth conceive Saint George so pictured, (as we see him in St. Sepulchres in Paris;) to be an embleme, a Symbol, or an Hieroglyphicke. But yet Baronius doeth not thinke that St. George himselfe was an Hieroglyphicke onely, or an embleme. This is an argument, much like that other which we met withall before; wherein Baronius himselfe must testifie against himselfe, that the whole story of St. George, was nothing else but a forgery of the Arians: whereas indeed he spake it only of one old Legend in particular, writ by the Arians, as hee thought of their Alexandrian. And this may also be replied to Doctor Boys, who tells us twice for sayling, how roundly Cardinal Baronius hath taken up Iacobus de Voragine, for his leaden Legend of St. George. If they or any other for them, have more to say, it is as I conceive it, that Article as yet not answered, touching Dacianus; and the apparant contradictions which are betweene our witnesses, in that particular. Which argument or exception rather, wee doubt not but to satisfie with as much ease, as those before it: when we have taken out Commission, for the examination of witnesses on our party; in whom such an apparant contradiction is suspected. In the meane time, I thinke we may with good assurance of these mens quietnesse heereafter, turne our whole strengths upon that adversary which hath done us greatest injury. Even upon them, who seeme to censure Calvin as too meeke and modestly disposed, in so great a quarrell; and thinke S. George not wronged enough in being thought No man, the issue of an idle braine; unlesse he rather bee esteemed a wicked and ungodly man, a bloody Arian. Calvinum itaque moderatissime agit adversum Pontificios, ubi de Georgio quem invocant, Lib. 1. cap. 5. ita loquitur, quasi nullus unquam, non quasi impius existisset. The rest which followes in the Doctor, viz. cum spectans ut in- terfectorem

terfellorem Dracenis, non ut Cappadocem is but a shift to save the matter, as before we noted. On therefore unto his opinion, the ground and proofes whereof, are in the next place, to be examined.

CHAP.

CHAP. VI.

(1) An entrance to the History of George the Arian Bishop. (2) The controversie stated, and drawne up to three conclusions. (3) George frequently mistooke for Gregory in ancient writers. (4) A rule to rectifie their errors touching George and Gregory. (5) George put for Gregory in Athanasius Epistle ad Orthodoxos : (6) As also in his Treatise de Synodis Seleuciz &c. and in Philostorgius. (7) An answer to some other passages in Athanasius. (8) Cappadox used proverbially for a lewd and wicked man. (9) George proved to be no Cappadocian, out of Nazianzen. (10) George borne at Epiphania in the Province of Cilicia. (11) Two maine objections answered, which may probably be brought against Ammianus and his testimony.

(1)

T was, as I conceive it, a wise and necessary course of Casca, a Roman Citizen, to publish by the common Crier, his Name and Pedigree: wherein hee gave the people notice, that whereas Casca was the name of one of those, which had conspired the death of Caesar, for his part, he neither was the Traytor, nor any of his kindred. The reason of which action, he thus gives in Dion, ἐν Κίμνῳ δημοτυμίας Hist. Rom. l. 44. ἀπόλετο, Quod Cinna nominis causa occideretur. The like device to this, is in the same Authour, reported of one Varro; and this device must we also now make use of, in our present businesse. For such was the most barbarous demeanor of one George, once an intruding Bishop in the Church of Alexandria, a furious Arian, and bloody Butcher of the true Christians: and so extreemely odious is his name become, in the eares and hearts of all good people, that wee which love St. George, must by the common Crier, and publicke Procla-

Proclamation, make knowne his parentage, and acts, and sufferings. Otherwise it will bee with him as it was with Cinna, and hee shall suffer for those impious sinnes and cruell misdemeanours, which were done many yeeres after his transmigration to a better life. This therefore we resolve to do in S. Georges cause, but not this only. For we will first relate the whole History of George the Arian, his Country, his exploits, and manner of his death, in which how little is there which may have the least resemblance unto the story of our Martyr. That done, and Doctor Reynolds sufficiently answered, as I hope it will appeare, in the mere prosecution of the Story : we will proceed unto the birth, and parentage, and constant sufferings of St. George; and to those testimonies after, which all the Ages of the Church, not one excepted, successively have given him.

(2) And first wee must begin with the birth and Country of this Arian Bishop, which Doctor Reynolds doth as firme to be in Cappadocia. For thus he closeth up his Disputation in this present argument. Caterum cum Georgius quem De Idol. Rom. l. 1. c. 5. Sect. 22. Ecclesia orientalis & occidentalis pro Martyre colit, fuerit Cappadox; nec ullum Georgij Cappadociæ, ut Martyris, nisi Ariani, mentio ab illo idoneo autore fiat: vel ista circumstantia demonstrat Georgium non Sanctum, sed Ariarium Martyrem fuisse.

In which wee have these three conclusions comprehended, 1 That the Arian George was a Cappadocian. 2 That George the Arian was reputed for a Martyr : And 3 that never any George of Cappadocia hath bene reputed for a Martyr, but George the Arian, in any Author worthy credit. Vnto these heads we must reduce the whole controversie ; and we will handle each apart, that so the points in issue, may bee more easily determined. This present Chapter wee shall spend in searching out the birth place of this Arian Bishop : the next in the description of his life and story, wherein wee soone shall see what an unlikely thing it is, that hee should ever be reputed for a Martyr. Vnto the third conclusion, which is indeed the maine of all, we shall devote the second part of this Discourse, and that wholly. My Readers I desire in the words of Tully, ut quod pollicitus sim, memoria mandent ;

Orat pro Quintius

dent ; facilius eos rem totam accepturos si hec meminimus. And for mine owne part, hec tria cum docuero, perorabo.

(3) And first, as for the Country of the Arian George of Alexandria, I must confesse this once for all, that I am verily perswaded, that it was not Cappadocia, but Cilicia rather. For prooffe of which, and my proceeding in that prooffe, I must commend that admonition of Baronius touching George and Gregory, which hee proposeth to his Reader, as very serviteable to this purpose : Ob nominis quandam similitudinem & alia plura simul convenientia, magnas inter Veteres Scriptores reperiri ambages, dum interdum apud eos Georgius pro Gregorio nuncupatur, vel Gregorius vice versa pro Georgio ponitur. The likenesse of their names (saith he) and many more particulars in the which they doe agree, hath beene occasion of no few difficulties & perplexities in the ancient writers ; whiles George sometimes, Librarium visso, by the transcribers fault, is put for Gregory, and sometimes Gregory for George. Both of them, though at severall times, supplanted Athanasius ; both settled in the Church of Alexandria by force and violence ; both cruell and tyrannicall in their way of government ; both stout and resolute Champions of the Arian faction. So that agreeing in so many severall circumstances, and being both of them of a very vile and lewd condition ; their names are many times mistaken, and their acts confounded in approved Authors ; that being frequently ascribed unto the one, which belongs properly to the other. Gregory, as we shall see anon, was a native of Cappadocia : this by forgetfulness or mistake, or both, by Socrates, Sozomen, Nicephorus and others, is affirm'd of George. George without doubt, was by the Alexandrians torne in peeces ; which on the same mistake is by Theodoret affirm'd of Gregory ; and, against right and reason, countenanced by Baronius. Gregory, saith Theodoret, having with great cruelty preyed upon his flock ; was by them slaine at last in a wretched manner, (ἔσθ' αὐτῷ τινὲς διαφθορῆς) so smarting for his old offences. Nor have the writers of thole times, confounded them together, as before we said ; but shewed much ignorance, or carelesnesse at least,

Adrih.
An. 341. N. 12.

bist. l. 2. cap. 4.

least, of their affaires : as in their stories they have tendred them unto us. Witnesse that tale of Socrates & Sozomen. concerning Gregory ; viz. that presently upon his coming unto Alexandria, the Arians themselves removed him thence, and George was settled in his roome : because (say they) ἦσαν τῷ αὐτῷ δὲ ξαν (we expect), hee was not thought sufficiently to promote the cause. (Compare this passage with that other of Theodoret, and marke how they agree together.) But the encyclicall Epistles of the Councell of Sardica, which wee may better trust, extant in Athanasius, and the same Socrates and Sozomen, affirme the contrary ; viz. that he continued there untill his deposition, by the decree and sentence of that Councell. And Athanasius tells us, that ten moneths after, that is to say, after the ending of that Councell, this Gregory deceased : and that Constantius thereupon invited Athanasius (not George) with great honour to his Church, εἶτα μὲν μῆνας πέντε τελευτήσας ὁ Γρηγόριος μεταπέμψεται ἡ Ἀλεξανδρῶν μὲν ἡμῶν πῶτος, &c. This, with some other things that follow, shew us how ignorant the Historians of those times were in the businesse then on foot : how little credit is to bee given to any of them, in the particulars of these two Arian Bishops, George and Gregory.

Ad solitar. vit.
ageni. gr. lat. p.
863.

(4) Therefore to set the businesse right, and once for ever, to rectifie those errors which arise in this mistake ; I will by way of a Chronology exhibite a briefe view of the estate of holy Church, as then it stood ; even from the first investiture of Gregory, till the death of George. Know then that in the yeere 341, was held the Councell, or the conventicle rather of Antiochia ; where Athanasius was deposed, and Gregory design'd successeur. Anno 342 Gregory came to Alexandria ; and by Philagrius one of the Emperours officers (not Syrianus, as Socrates and Sozomen confusedly have told us) was put into possession of that Church and Bishoprick. About the end of this yeere also died Eusebius of Nicomedia ; the principall supporter of the Arian heresie. Anno 346 a Councell was appointed in the City of Sardica, and there assembled the next yeere immediately following ; where Gregory and other Bishops of that party were were exaufterated; the Orthodox being restored unto their Churches. Anno 348, the Emperour Constantius wrot in a threatening stile unto Constantius, his brother, touching the restitution of Athanasius to his Church, according to the sentence and determination of that Synod: and in the yeere 349, Gregory being then deceased, hee was permitted by Constantius to returne unto his people. Anno 350, Prince Constantius treacherously was murdered by Magnentius, who usurped his Empire; whereupon followed warres between Constantius and the Tyrant, during which warres the Arians suffred Athanasius to live in quiet. Anno 353 Magnentius being vanquished, and Constantius sole Commander of the Roman Monarchy; hee bent his whole endeavours to oppresse the Orthodoxe professours: and in the yeere ensuing, began againe to practise the remove of Athanasius, using therein the service of Syrianus and Heraclius, two Imperiall officers. Anno 356, Athanasius, having beene condemned the yeere before, in an assembly of the Arians held at Milaine, and now in danger of his life by Syrianus, abandoned Alexandria: the Arian George by the commandement of Constantius, succeeding there into his place. Anno 359, was held a Synod at Seleucia in the lesser Asia, where George of Alexandria was deprived by an adverse party amongst the Arians themselves: who notwithstanding, going thence to Alexandria, plagued and oppressed the people of it more then ever. Anno 361, being the second yeere of Julian the Apollata, this George was violently done to death by the Alexandrians. This sayd, we shall the better iudge when any of our Authors speake of Gregory, and when of George.

(5) The ground thus laid, we will make search into such passages in Athanasius and others, which seeme to make the Arian George, a Cappodocian. And first in his encyclicall epistle, ad Orthodoxos, wherein hee dooth relate the history and success of his owne affayres: hee tells us this, how all things being then in quiet in the Church of Alexandria, the Governour of Egypt produced a mandat from the Prince, wherein it was declared, Georgium Cappadocem natione pro P. 944. Gr. Lat.

H

successore

successore mihi datum, that George the Cappadocian was design'd his successour. The Greeke text reads it, ὡς Γεωργίου ἐν Καππαδοκίᾳ εἰσαρχομένου διαδόχου μου, &c. which rather may be readred, George coming thither out of Cappadocia was design'd his successour; if one would quarrell the translation, which I will not doe. It may bee secondly objected, that Philagrius, who in the same Epistle is enti-

P. 944. Gr. Lat.
Orat. 21.

tuled ὡς Γεωργίου πατριάρχης, the countryman of this George the Bishop, is in S. Gregory Nazianzen said to be a Cappadocian, as we grant he was. I have alleadged these places both together, because one helps to satisfie and refell the other: this passage of Philagrius making it plaine and evident, that Grogery and not George, is the man intended. My reason is, because Philagrius is here said to bee the instrument of Athanas.

Ad solitar. vit.
agen. p. 815.

Georges cruelty: ἐν δὲ ἐνδοχῇς Ἀρμένῳ, and then Governor of Egypt. But Athanasius tells us first, that this Philagrius was by the Arian faction in the Court made Governor of Egypt, of purpose to invest Grogery not George in the See of Alexandria, ἐν τῇ μεγάλῃ ἑκκλησίᾳ τῆς Ἀλεξάνδρειας, &c. ἐν Γρηγόριον καθίστατον ἐκείνου, as he there hath it. He tells us secondly, how after Gregory was deprived and dead, as before is said,

Ad h.

Ibid. p. 829. 842
843. 867.

he was restored himselfe unto Alexandria, and there continued, till Syrianus first, and after Diogenius and Philarius began anew to prosecute the poore Alexandrians. The persecution thus begun, and Athanasius fled, the Emperour sent his letters for his apprehension, using therein the service of one Heraclius, προσέδωκεν τῷ Γεωργίῳ τὸ ἀποστέλλεσθαι

P. 843.

μετὰ τῷ βασιλεὺς κατασχεῖν: the forerunner (as hee calls him) of one George, sent by the Prince to be their Bishop, or indeed rather his informer. Afterwards that Heraclius associated to himselfe Cataphronius and Faustinus, for the more through execution of the Emperours pleasure: and that this

P. 1478

Apol. de fuga.
p. 704. Gr. Lat.

George being now Bishop, made one Sebastian Captaine of the Garrison, his property and engine wherewithall to afflict the people. But of Philagrius not a word, as any way employed in that time and businesse. Adde herunto that in that place ad Orisodorus, George is related to bee sent to the least (for the Greeke phrase will beare them both) by those which held with him the same faction. Which may be verified of Gregory, but not well of George; Ensebius being then alive when Gregory was designed for Alexandria; but dead long time before this George came thither, as before we shewed. I adde further, that Athanasius having there pursued the history of Gregory; doth in the end of that Epistle tell us this, that when the Arians saw that Gregory whom before he spake of, was by the Church deposed and anathematized, τὸτε ἔκριναν Γεώργιον τὸν τοῖς αὐτοῖς Ἀριανοῖς P.949. ἀπέσειλαν, they after sent one George, as it were of purpose to be the Bishop of that City. The carriage of which George he doth in briefe present unto them.

P. 944.

Alexandria ἀπὸ τῆς ἑκκλησίας, either by Ensebius, or at the

(6) This very answer we must make to two other arguments, both more particularly, in shew, for the point in hand: one out of Athanasius, the other out of a Manuscript of Philostorgius. First, it may be objected out of Athanasius, that he in his Epistle De Synod. Armin. & Seleuc. doth expressly call this George a Cappadocian. Καὶ οὗτος ἦν Γεωργίου P.912. Gr. Lat. τὸ Καππαδόκιος, τὸ ἐκκλησίῃς ὑπὸ τῆς Ἀλεξανδρείας, λόγος ἰδίως. There is (saith he) no consideration to be had of George the Cappadocian, who was ejected or cast out of Alexandria. But here say I, and so Baronius doth conceive, that this must needs be meant not of George, but Gregory: because it may be verified of Gregory, that he was ἐκκλησίῃς ὑπὸ τῆς Ἀλεξανδρείας, ejected or cast out of Alexandria; but of George it cannot. For Philostorgius, whom Nicephorus calls θεομισῆς, a Lib.1 cap.1. man odious to God; we are inform'd by Photius, that hee was an Arian, and wrote an Ecclesiasticall history, but so false and partiall, that it might rather be entituled ἡσώμιον Cap.20. ἢ αἰρετικῶν, the hereticks encomium. This Philostorgius, Master Patrick Young communicated to me in an old Greek Manuscript. Hee tels us this, first that Constantinus having Lib.3. driven Athanasius from Alexandria, ἀντιχρηστὸν ἔστησε Γεώργιον τὸν ἐκ Καππαδοκίας, &c. caused to be consecrated in his roome, one George of Cappadocia. And not long after that, on a threatening letter sent from the Emperour Constant, who favoured Athanasius, Constantinus did by an Epistle mandatory

to

La di.

mandatory revoke George from Alexandria; ἀν' ὃ ἔτι τὸν αὐτὸν παρὰ τὴν Καππαδοκίαν ἀπέλυτο, &c. And he accordingly return'd by Cappadocia, his owne Country, καὶ διήμυ τὴν καὶ αὐτὸν διηκοῦσιν, and there bestowed the remnant of his time, busied alone about himselfe. This seemes expresse to make this George a Cappadocian; but it is not so.
 For neyther of these passages are meant of George, but of Gregory only: the last serving as a Commentary, to explain the first. My reason is, because Constantine is there sayd to have revoked the Arian George, upon a threatening letter sent unto him from his brother Constans: which was immediately upon the rising of the Councell of Sardica. Now Constans, as before we sayd, was killed some yeeres before this George was sent for Alexandria: and it was Gregory, not George, which was removed uppon these letters, as is evident in Chronologie. This yet confirms me, that these mistakes of George for Gregory, have made George a Cappado-cian; and nothing els.

17

Page 704.

Cont

(7) Hitherto it is evident, that Athanasius (not to say any more of Philostorgius) hath beene mistaken in his words:
 may wee not probably conclude, that in that which followes, he hath beene mistaken in his meaning. It's true, he tells us in his Apol. defuga, of this George, that hee was sent from Cappadocia, by the Arian faction in the concordia:
 ὁ παρ' αὐτῶν ἀποσταλὸς ἐκ Καππαδοκίας Γεώργιος, sayth the Greeke; ab ipsis e Cappadocia missus Georgius, as the Latine hath it. Georgius ex Cappadocia ab ipsis missus, as in the tripartite history it is translated. This prooves indeed, that Cappadocia was, as then, his habitation, the place of his abode, but not his country; for wee denie not that hee came from Cappadocia, and was there resiant at that time, when hee was sent first unto Alexandria. The like may be replied also to another passage in oratione I. contra Arianos, where it is sayd, that they, the Arians, for the promoting of their cause, had hired one George, out of Cappadocia, with an intent to send him to the Alexandrians. διὰ τὸ τοῦ καὶ Γεώργιον ἀπὸ Καππαδοκίας πρὸς μισθωσίμους, θέλουσιν ἀποστέλλαι πρὸς ὑμᾶς. &c.
 the text hath it. Where, to note so much by the way, the Latine

Page 390.

Latine renders μωροὶ, by redemerunt, and the word will beare it; which perhaps intimates, that they had freed a man lurking in Cappadocia (which was Georges case) out of the danger of the Law, wherein hee stood; because they found him active, and like to make an able stickler, in the Arian heresie. These therefore sayling in the maine, at least the cleerenes of the prooffe; let us consult such places which in that Reverend Authour doe more cleerely call him a Cappadocian: and they are two, both in the same epistle ad solitariam vitam agentes. There doeth hee call him, Γεωργιον τινά Καππαδόκιον ἄνθρωπον, one George, a Cappadocian, or a man of Cappadocia. And in the close thereof, hee mentions the election, Γεωργίου τῷ Καππαδόκῳ, of George the Cappadocian. To these wee will adioyne that passage out of Nazianzene, where he is stiled τῆς τῇ Καππαδοκίᾳ, Orat. 21. a Cappadocian monster, and not so only, but a Cappadocian, ex ultimis terre nostrae finibus oriundum: borne in the farthest parts of all our country, (remember Greg. Nazianz. was that countryman) as the Latine hath it.

(8) For answer to these places, wee must first take notice, that George by reason of his great and many misdemeanours had forsooke the Court, wherein he was before in office: and was at that time, when hee was designed for Alexandria, lurking in Cappadocia, hiding his guilty head amongst them, and from thence sent, ὑποσταλὲς ἐν Καππαδοκίᾳ, as in Athanasius. Which sayd, we answer first, that probably Athanasius might be mistaken, and conceive that to bee his Country, which was indeed the place onely of his refuge and abode. Ex eo deceptus, quod quem constat vixisse in Cappadocia, natum in ea provincia existimavit, as in a like case, An. 360. n. 35. but not the same, Baronius hath it. I answer secondly, that the places cited in Athanasius, and that in Nazianzene, are spoken there onely, as proverbiall kinde of speeches, then and before that time, in use: the Cappadocians being so lewd and infamous, that it became a proverbe, or a common by-word, to call a lewd and wicked man, a man of Cappadocia. Erasmus noted this, amongst his other Adages, where speaking of that by-word τῆς κυκλοπικῆς, a Cyclopiian monster,

fter, he adds that after that proverbiall kinde of speaking, Nazianz. in orationem ad Athanasium, calls Atticus (hee mistakes the man but not the thing) a most wicked hereticke, τέρας η Καππαδοκίως or portentum Cappadocium. The reason of the proverbe was, ex eo quod Cappadocum gens improba esset & flagitiosa; because the Cappadocians were so wicked and flagitious. So Snidas having told us, that καπη δισπλυν, is proverbially taken, for duplez malum; adds in the next place this, τετα καπη χλυστα, Καππαδοκία, Κρήτη, Κιλικία, which he had from the Scholiast on Calimachus. The meaning is, that the three nations of the Cappadocians, Gretans and Cilicians, were of all others the most vile and worst conditioned. Nay he speaks plainer, as I take it, to this purpose, and tells us presently, λέγεται ὁ Καππαδοκίως, ὁ Καππαδοκίως ἴσως, which are the words heere used, both by Athanasius and Nazianzeno. And howsoever the Cilicians, (which was the country of this George) are included also in the same proverbe: yet in comparison of the Gretans, who were ἀνὴρ λωστής, alwayes liars; and of the Cappadocians, who were the most enormously wicked: it may be thought, that they were onely added to make up the number: the Cappadocians being the most lewd of all the rest. For thus (to seeke no further) Cicero speaking of Caesennius Calventinus, a Roman borne, amongst a many other base and unworthy attributes, such as are ardus, imbutus, elinguis, negligens; calls him at last, Cappadocum, a Cappadocian. Of which, this reason is assigned by Freigius, in his Annotations on the Orator; Cappadoces enim male audisse ostendit proverbium. So that for ought I see, the stile of καππαδοκίως ἀδελφός, homo Cappadox; and ὁ καππαδοκίς, ille Cappadox, given him by Athanasius: and that of τέρας καππαδοκίως, monstrum Cappadox, repeated out of Nazianz, by Geo. Cedrenus, may rather signifie the manners and conditions of the man, then denote his country. And why not thus, considering that sides Attica, & sides Punicæ, Græciam ingenium & senestra Cymmeria, and many others of that kinde, are commonly so used in the best Authers. Though Cappadocia had of late brought forth many Martyrs; and for that reason is commended in some places, by Nazianzen that country-man ; yet in this present age it had produced as many monsters ; which was inough to countenance and uphold the proverbe, Euphronius, reckoned by the Centurists, amongst the hereticks of this age, Auxentius, Gregory of Alexandria, Asserius, Eustathius of Sebastia, Theophronius, and that arch-Heretick of his time Eunomius, were all of them Cappadocians. Nor is it strange, that Nazianzen should soule the phrase, himselfe a native of that country ; for speaking this Oration at Constantinople, as he did, it was no more unseemly in him, to call a fellow, such as George was, by the old proverbe, monstrum Cappadox : then should De Moulin, at such time as he was in London, have called the Pox, in Latine, morbus Gallicus : then Bera living in Geneva, should call the same disease by the name of Scabies Gallica, as indeed hee doeth ; speaking of P. Caroli, in his history of the life of Calvin.

(9) Suppose we so, that monstrum Cappadox in Nazianzen, and homo Cappadox, and ille Cappadox in Athanasius, be taken as proverbiall kindes and formes of speech ; yet Nazianzen expressly tels us, ex ultimis terrarum nostrarum finibus oriundum esse, Orat. 11. that hee was borne in the remotest parts of all his Country, which was Cappadocia. Indeed Saint Gregory so calls him in the Latine Copies, which makes the matter somewhat plaine ; but looke upon the Author in his owne Language, and it will hardly bee so good a prooff as was intended. The Greeke text only hath it, ἐκ τῆς ἐξαρπῶν τῆς ημετέρας, ἐρμώδους, comming with haste and violence, or howsoever comming, travelling, or setting forwards out of the farthest parts of all these Countreyes ; which well agreeth with that of Athanasius before alleaged ; where it is said, that he was sent from Cappadocia, ἐκ Καπποδοκίας ἀποσταλείς, to take possession of the Church of Alexandria. That in this place, ἐρμώδους is to be renderd oriundum, and that conceived to signifie as much as borne ; is, as I take it, not alone besides the minde of Nazianzen, but against it rather. Nazianzen, as in that Oration, hee hath set downe the sufferings of Athanasius ; so those especially which were inflicted on him by the meanes of George, that Cappadocian monster, as hee there calls him. He ushers it, or brings it in with this preamble, μία ὁ θεοβολῶν ἢ χαλεποτάτη, that there was one assault against him (which was this of George) more rude and violent, than any hee before had suffered; and then addes presently, ἀλλὰ μοι παρτείδωτο φίλον ἔδαφος, &c. But here (saith hee) I must a little speake in defence of my native Country. And what is that? ἡ γὰρ τ' ἐρασίμης ἀλλὰ καὶ πορρολομήων ἢ πονηρία: For wickednesse and vices are not to bee imputed to the Country, but unto those who have made choice of it for their habitation; that being famous for its piety (conceive it in the production of so many Martyrs;) but these unworthy of the Church in which they are new-borne and new-begotten. I say, those which have made choice of it, for such the meaning is of προσελομένων, being a participle of προσμενδύω. The word is so used by Plutarch, where hee informes us of Camillus, that being made Dictator, ἵππαρχον ὃ καὶ τὸ ἡγεμὼν προσελέχοντο. Κορήλα-ον Σκηπτιῶνα: he chose Cornelius Scipio his Magister Equitum, or Commander generall of the horse. And so in other Authors also, Bilius, though like a Paraphrast, hath in this place and passage rightly exprest the meaning both of the word, and of the Author, thus, Improbitas non patrie, sed ijs qui animi inducibus eam elegerunt; that not the Country is to be accused as lewd and vicious, but they who on mature deliberation had made choice thereof for their abode. So that it seemes by Gregory, that George the Arian (who gave occasion, as is plaine, to this Apology) was not a native, but a stranger; one that made choise of Cappadocia for his lurking hole, his place of habitation.

(10) But put the case that Athanasius in those places calls George a Cappadocian properly, and not proverbially; & that in Nazianzen it be cleerly testified, that he was born in Cappadocia, which is yet not proved: I answer thirdly, that possibly both of them may be deceived: my reason is, because it is expressly said in Ammianus Marcellinus, who lived about these times, and whose report may well be taken, that he was borne in Epiphania, a chiefe City of Cilicia; and as

In Camillo.

as it was given out, in a Fulling Mill. In Fullonio natum, ut ferebatur, apud Epiphaniam Cilicia oppidum, auctusq; in damna complurium, contra utilitatem suam, rei que communis, Episcopus Alexandria est ordinatus. The old bookes read it, in fulio, and in fulio, but mended by Gruterus out of the Antographum of Faucherius, where by the way, ut ferebatur, is notto be referred to apud Epiphaniam, but to the words precedent, in fullonio natum; so pointed in all the copies I have seene; and Englished so by Doctor Holland, though hee mistake himselfe in the word in fulio. This is particular indeed, both for the Province, that it was Cilicia; and for the place, in Epiphania, none of the meanest of that Province; and for the house more specially, as it was reported, in fullonio, in a fulling mill. What can bee more expresse then this, the house, the City, and the Prouince cleerly noted; all in plaine termes, and such as needs no commentary. Baronius saw this truth, and did ingenuously confesse it. For howsoever at the first hee tels us on the credit of some ancient writers (utroque Cappadoces fuisse veteres scriptores tradunt) that Gregory and George were both of them Cappadocians; yet he concludes at last, convicted with this testimony of Ammianus, that George was to bee reckoned as a native of Cilicia. Caterum ex testificatione Ammiani (saith the Cardinall) necesse est eosdem discriminari patriam; siquidem Georgius nequaquam Cappadox verè fuit, sed Cilix, Epiphanius civitate oriundus. I am not ignorant that one of the Præfures of Cappadocia, was called Cilicia: but I know also that Epiphania was a City of Cilicia, properly so called, an entire province of it selfe. Nor was it seated on the borders, which might any way entitle it to Cappadocia; but in the mid-land countries, farre enough from Cappadocia, and more inclining to the South border, if to any, towards Simus Issicus. Thus Ptolomy reckoning the mid-land Cities of Cilicia, τῆς ἰσθμίας Κιλικίας, Cilicia properly so called, doth Lib. 5. ranke them thus: Cesarea penes Anazarbum, 68. 30. 37. 0. & Epiphania, 69. 30. 36. 20. and Issus, in almost the same both longitude and latitude, 69. 20. 36. 26. Its true; that Greg. Nyssen in his discourse against Eunomius, published not first

adit.

not

not long since by Gretserus, doth call this George, Tarbasthenites; which whether it might be some adjunct of his family, or the name rather of the place, where he was most conversant, I am not able to determine. Once I am sure, that I have sought in Strabo, Pliny, Ptolomy, and in Stephanus Byzantinus, and whom not ? but cannot meet with any towne which might so denominate him, except it should be Tarbastus, which Strabo counts among the Cities of the Pisidians, a nation neere upon the confines of Cilicia. It is also true, that Myssen calls him in that place, τὸν Καππαδόκην, the Cappadocian: which may occasion some to thinke, that Cappadocia was his Country; and that Tarbasthenis, or some such towne of Cappadocia was his birth place. For there hee tels us, how Georgius the Tarbasthenite, then vexing and molesting the Alexandrians, Actius that arch-hereticke came unto him; ἐλθὼς ἐλαπὼν ἔχων ὅτι ὑποβεβοημένον καὶ παρσιέντων τῷ Καππαδόκῃ. a man inferiour unto none, in flattering and in soothing up the Cappadocian. Heere Καππαδόκης questionlesse is to bee understood proverbially. Els how improper were it, should any say, that Georgius the Tarbasthenite, (supposing that Tarbasthenis was a towne of Cappadocia) being at Alexandria: found Actius the forwardest, no man more, to flatter, and to humour the Cappadocian. Iust as a man should say, that Iohn of Oxen, when he dwelt at Amsterdam, found Iohn of Leyden very apt to sooth the English man. A forme of speech too harsh and rugged to be taken properly.

(11) Two things there are that probably may be objected against the testimony of Ammianus: the first that Nazian. and *Nysse*n (if they call him Cappadox, and monstrum Cappadox, properly, and not proverbially) being that countrymen; are to be sooner credited then any hee that was a stranger. Secondly, that one heathen is not to be beleaved before so many Christian writers. I answer first unto the last, that it is neither strange, nor any way, unfitting in matters such as this, to rectifie the error and mistakes of a Christian Author, by the more perfect observations of an heathen. To instance once for all. It is affirm'd by Ephraim, phanus, no careless writer, that Constantius father to Constantine the great, was sonne unto the Emperour Valerian. Εὐνομίου ὁ πατήρ ὁ Ἀπὸ τοῦ ἑσθίου Κωνσταντίνου ὁ Κωνσταντίνου πατρίδος, Ηερσ. 69. Ν. 1: Ἰουλιανὸν ὁ Οὐαλεριανὸς βασιλέως. This is an error questionable, in Epiphanius, and no dishonour it is to him, as I take it, to have his error rectified out of Trebellius Pollio an heathen writer, who thus, according to the truth draws down his genealogy. Claudius (saith hee) Quintillus & Crispus in D. Claudio, fratres fuerunt, Crispi filia Claudia, ex ea & Entropio genitus Constantius Caesar. I know not any who in this will not assent rather to Trebellius Pollio, although an heathen, then to Epiphanius; and why not then to Ammonius, who is so punctuall and exact; rather then unto Naxianzen, or Myssen, who speake in generals. But then it is replied, that Naxianzen and Myssen were themselves of Cappadocia; and therefore to be trusted more then Ammonius, in matters of their owne Country. I answer, that Saint Basil also was a Cappadocian, and tels us, that Ennomius that arch-heretick was a native of Galatia. Εὐνομίου ὁ πατήρ ὁ Γαλάτης, Adv. Eunom. as the father hath it. But Sozomen who was of Cyprus, saith l. 1. in initio. that he was of Cappadocia, borne in the City called Dracera. L. 7. cap. 17. Whether of these shall wee beleevve Basil, who was that countryman, or Sozomen who was a stranger? Baronius inclines to Basil (as almost who would not) and thinks that Sozomen was deceived. No marvell, for the Cardinall had not scene that tract of Myssen, above mentioned, where Sozomen is justified, and Basil in this case abandoned. Myssen in that discourse brings in Ennomius upbraiding Basil, and saying of him, that hee was ὁ βέλτης, πορρωτέρως, καὶ ψευδής, rahs, L. 1. p. 43. false, and slanderous. And why all this? ὅτι καὶ Καππαδοκίῳ ὄντι καὶ Γαλατίῳ ὀνόμασι because forsooth hee had affirm'd Ennomius to bee a Galatian, being indeed a Cappadocian. If so, as to it is, I see no reason but that both Naxianzen and Myssen, though that countrymen, might be as wel deceived, in making George to be a Cappadocian, he being a Cilician rather: as Basil was in making this Ennomius a Galatian; whereas indeed hee was a Cappadocian. Other authorities which perhaps may bee produced from Socrates and Sozomen, men, and other writers since those times, I list not ponder. For it is evident, that as they have confounded George with Gregory, and otherwise bewray much ignorance in the affaires of holy Church in these times and ages ; so where they seeme to speake out of Nazianzene and Athanasius, they either were misguided by their error, or else mistaken in their meaning. It is not therefore yet apparant, that George the Arian was by birth of Cappadocia, which is the first of these conclusions which wee have deducted out of Doctor Reynolds : nay, it is rather evident, that hee was a native of Cilicia. But put the worst, and let the Arian George be a Cappadocian, as he would have it. Suppose it so, yet what can this supposall prejudice our blessed Martyr ? What prooffe is this, that George the Arian must bee George our Martyr, because the Arian is conceived to bee borne also in Cappadocia. Then either must all Cappadocians be infected with that heresie ; or else all Georges at the least which were of Cappadocia. And what will then become of George, a Cappadocian too, most likely ; whom Nazianzen in his Epistles calls ἀδελφον καὶ συνδιδάκτον, his fellow Minister and brother ; ἄνθρωπος καὶ ἐξαίρετων ἡμῶν, &c. a man both profitable to the Church, and most deere to him. Was he an Arian also, because a George ; a George of Cappadocia ? I need not presse this further, but proceed unto my next Antithesis ; viz. that George the Arian was never reckoned for a Martyr.

L. 1. p. 301

Epist. 126.

CHAP.

CHAP. VII.

(1) The life of George the Arian before he was appointed Bishop. (2) His butcherly behaviour in that holy Dignity. (3) Degraded in the Councell of Seleucia. (4) An Aversion of Drusius in making George the Laodicean to bee the same with him of Alexandria. (5) Georges returns to Alexandria the occasion of his death. (6) Not done to death for his religion, by the Gentiles. (7) Never reputed as a Martyr in the Christian Church. (8) Actius not made Deacon by this George of Alexandria. (9) George not accounted for a Martyr amongst the Arians. (10) The infinite differences betweene the Arian George and Saint George the Martyr. (11) A briefe touch at the residue of Doctor Reynolds arguments. (12) Sir W. Rawleighs resolution in received opinions.

(I.)

HE next of those conclusions, to the which we have reduced the present controversie, is, that the Arian George was never reckoned for a Martyr. The contrary is affirm'd by Doctor Reynolds out of Epiphanius. We shall see what hee saith hereafter, having laid open first the life & manners of this George; that we may know thereby how little there was in him, which might merit that opinion. His birth-place, as before we noted out of Ammianus, was Epiphania, one of the principall Cities of the Province of Cilicia: his parentage obscure and base, and his conditions answerable. Nazianzen informes us of him, „ that hee was πορνός το ῥέθ, πορνός τῶ πτωχῶ, a Orak. „ man of a bad stock, and worfe qualities; ἡ λέγων ἐλπίδι „ εἰων μετρηκός, ἡ πτωχῶ συνίστανται πτωχῶ, &c. not any way en- „ nobled in his knowledge, nor affable in his conversation. „ on; no nor so much as making any shew of godlinesse, „ or cloaking his impieties with faire and specious pretexts, „ but

„ but apt to any bold attempt, and a most proper instru„ ment to disturbe the common quiet. In his beginnings
 „ a most base and servile parasite, the common Fly that „ sucked at every table; so fitted for that businesse, that all „ his words and actions did seeme to have no other end, „ then filling of his belly only. His first preferment was „ an office, of all others the most base and sordid; ἐστὶν ὁ „ κρεῶν ὑποδότης, &c. the Caterer forsooth, or Provisor ge„ nerall of hogs-flesh for the army. In which hee bare „ himselfe so ill, that at the last, he was even forced to take „ himselfe unto his heeles; & as the custome is of vagabonds „ (ἡ δὲ φύσις αὐτοῦ) never to tarry long in any place; untill at „ last he fell like an Egyptian plague, upon the Church of „ Alexandria, ἐν ταύτῃ δὲ τῇ ἄλλῃ Ἰσαυρίᾳ, καὶ τῇ κακουργίᾳ ἐρχεται.
 „ And here, saith Gregory, hee left off his roguing, and be„ gan his villanies. So Athanasius tels us of him, that hee

Ad solitar. vitæ agent. p. 861.

was ὑποδότης ἐν Κωνσταντινὸς παμμάκων ἡνδρῶν, entrusted with the keeping of provisions in Constantinople. But being found to have abused his trust, σπετερίζαμεν πάντα, and made use of all to his owne profit, he was faine to fly; and found, it seemes, no place of safety, till hee came to Cappado-
cia. For this cause Athanasius as before he call'd him Γεώργιον παμαιορέον, George, the devourer of the store; so now hee brands him with this marke, Γεώργιον ὁ διωχθεὶς ἀπὸ τῆς οἰ- κουμένης, a fellow that was chased and hunted over all the world. But being of the Emperours religion, who stode mainly for the Arians; and of a subtle head withall, for the dispatch of great affayres: the Arians made his peace, redeem'd him, (μεινωσάμενοι) in Athanasius language; and with the Emperours power and favour sene him to Alexandria.
 So Sozomen relates, that hee was seetled there in the roome of Gregory; ὡς καὶ φησὶν, καὶ περὶ τούτου τὸ ὄνομα ἀποδοῦναι &c. As being active in his wayes, and a stout champion of that sect.

Orat. 1. contra Arianos.

Lib. 3. cap. 6.

(2) George thus appointed Bishop, was put into possession, by the imperiall officers there being; his cariage, presently upon his entrance, exceeding violent and bloody.
ἐν τῷ ἐλθόντι τῇ πτωχεύσει, &c. as in Athanasius. He made his entrance

Apol. de fuga
p. 704. Gr. Lat.

entrance in the holy time of Lent, and presently after the end of Easter weeke, there was no other tidings to bee heard in Alexandria, then violent casting of the sacred virgins into prison, committing of the Suffragan Bishops to the custody of the men of warre, forcible spoyleing of the houses both of the fatherlesse, and widow; and other misdemeanours of that barbarous and hostile nature.
 τῇ δ' ἐς δευτέρην μὲν τὴν ἀγίαν πεντηκωστήν, &c. But in the weeke immediately after Whitsontide, the people on some solemn fast (ἡ λαὸς νηστεύσας) gathered themselves together in the Church-yard to their devotions; not tarrying in the Church, because they had no heart to receive the holy mysteries, with George their Bishop. This com-ming to his knowledge, he presently sent out unto Seba- stian, then captaine of the Garrison, and by Sect a Mani- chee; to arme his forces, and repayre to his assistance.
 (Where by the way, Emarville, and that not a little, that they which made St. George an Arian, because of the identitie of names; have not made St. Sebastian also an Hereticke of the Manichees, on the same reason.) Upon this message, Sebastian hastened with his band, and even upon that sacred day (it was a Sunday) made an assault upon the people in the place. The veyled Virgins were brought forth unto a flaming fire, and threatened death; in case they would not yeeld to the condemned Opinions of the Arian Hereticke: Such of them as continued constant in the Faith, being immodestly despoiled of all their garments; and buffeted so cruelly upon the face, that long time after, it was a matter of some difficulty to know who they were. No lesse than forty men were violently, and after a strange manner, torne in peeces: the rest more mercifully dealt withall, and banished. τὰ δ' ὅσμινα τα ἔτι πεντηκωστήν, ἐν τοῖς ἰδίαις ἀποθνήσκουσιν, &c. As for the bodies of the slaine, they would not give them to their friends and kindred, that so they might be honestly buried; but kept them privately at home, the better to delight and satiate their eyes with that bloody spectacle. So true is that of Phobius, that George had done such horrible
 and Asban. ut sup.

In Alban.

Here 76. in initio.

and barbarous cruelties in that poore City; ὡς πρὸς τοῖς ἔθνεσι καὶ χριστιανῶν πολυμύνητα, φιλανθρωπίαν νομιζέσθαι, that even the greatest persecution, rayed by the Gentiles, might in comparison heereof, be reputed mercifull:

(3) Vnto his tyrannies, let us adde somewhat of his avarice and extortions, whereby he also vexed and troubled the poore Alexandrians: And heereof Epiphanius tells us, that hee spoyled many of the citizens of their fathes goods, that he had tooke into his hands the farme of nitre, (πρὸς τὴν ἄπυρρον) and of the salt-pits, and the monopoly of Paper: making a gaine, ἄρτι καὶ τῶν ληπτῶν πωλεσμάτων, out of the least and vilest matters: that he established a new order of Beere-carriers, (Lellicary) in the Church, and restrayned them to a certaine number; not suffering any but those by him appointed, to have the buriall of the dead: and this not out of any care to see them decently interred, ὡς αὐτὰ ποιεῖσθαι βούληται but greedinesse of filthy lucre; not to say any thing (sayth hee) of his lusts and cruelties. Thus farre, and to this purpose, Epiphanius. Which his misgovernment in his place, being informed against him in a Councell holden in Seleucia, anno 358. or thereabouts; found plausible entertainment there amongst some of them, who were united in a faction against him: by whom hee legally and judicially was deprived of his ranke and dignity; some other things concurring, to exasperate mens mindes against him. The case was this. The Fathers heere assembled, intended, as it seemes, some mitigation in the points of Controversie then on foot, and therefore did declare our blessed Saviour, to be of a like Substance with the Father, though not the same. So that the difference now was onely in a letter, as made the difference but little lesse: The Nicens Creed pronouncing CHRIST to be ὁμοούσιον, of the same Substance; and this affirming him, to be onely ὁμοιόσιον, of the like substance. To which decree, this George, a peremptory and stubborne Arian, would not yeeld; for which, with other matters proved against him, he was sentenced to be degraded. I say, with other matters proved against him, because wee read in in Sozomen, that they of Egypt had accused him in the Councell of rapine, such & other contumelious crimes;

ἡ ἀρπαγὴν καὶ ὑβρίων Γεωργίου κατηγόρου οἱ Ἀγγλιῶται. As that Au- Lib. 4. cap. 16.
thor hath it.

(4) In this Seleucian Synod was present also another George, Bishop of Laodicea, a City of Syria, an Arian also, or one at least which did not favour the Homousians, for so they call'd them.

Γεώργιος ὁ Λαοδικεὺς ὁ ἐν Συρίᾳ ἐπίσκοπος, Socr. l. 1. c. 10.
ὃς ὦν ἤμεινεν τὸ ὁμολογεῖν. So Socrates. But yet, it seemeth, a peaceable and quiet Arian; one who not only willingly subscribed unto the Canons of that Councell, but also made himselfe head of a party against George of Alexandria, in the behalfe and cause of Cyril of Hierusalem. This Cyril Id lib. 2. c. 18.

being a learned and a godly Bishop, had a cause dependant Gr. 31. Lat.

in that Synod; and those which were profess'd and peremptory Arians, did purpose to depose him: that so, there might be roome to settle in Hierusalem, a Prelate of their ownefaction. But on the other side there was no want of such, who though they loved him not for his Opinions, which were true and Orthodox, did yet admire his learning, and respect his person. Hereupon the Councell was divided into two parts or factions: whereof the one was governed by Acacius Bishop of Cesarea, and George of Alexandria; the other by this George Bishop of Laodicea, and Sophronius of Pompeopolis. And after the determination of the Councell, there is this mention of him in the same Author, that he did doubtfully declare himselfe in the points of Doctrine then questioned: sometimes abetting the Decrees of the Seleucian Synode; and sometimes more inclining to the opinions of the Arians; καὶ ὅν τι ὁμοιον ὁμολο- ib. c. 36. Lat. μ.
γεῖν ταῖς ἡδὺν τῶν πατρῶν, Νόν δὲ αἰς τὴν Ἀρριανὴν ἀποκλίνειν. Gr.

Which being so, I doe the rather wonder a strange mistake in the learned Drusius, who makes this George the Laodicean to be the same with him of Alexandria. For in his Notes upon Sulpitius Severus, ad pag. 149, he hath it thus; 2a Hist. sacra.

Georgius Laodicea Episcopus, Cappadox, Arianorum πορνεία-70: and afterwards, ad pag. 156, Georgius Alexandria E-piscopus à Constantio constitutus, comes prius fuisset Episcopus La- odicensis.

odiceum. Which words of his, first make the Laodicean George to bee of Cappadocia; and afterwards translate him unto Alexandria: but neither rightly. And thus wee see how Doctor Reynolds first confounded George the Arian with S. George the Martyr; and Drusus confounded George the Laodicean with George the Alexandrian. There is another George Bishop of Alexandria too, mentioned in Photius as the Author of a booke concerning Chrysostome: osis ibid. cap. 96. De isv car. in tzo ou qis n naga-omus, but who he was (saith he) and in what time hee lived, I am not certaine. I wonder some or other hath not resolv'd the doubt, and made him also George the Arian, that so wee might have had a whole messe of Georges, and all but one.

(5) But to returne unto my story. No sooner was the Councell ended, but George prepared himselfe for his returne to Alexandria: however that he stood degraded by the sentence of that Synod. It seemes he was a man, not to be daunted with complaints or censures: for presently on his returne, he fell upon his former courses, plaguing aswell the Gentiles as the Christians, who would not be in all points of his opinion. By meanes whereof, and that the memory of his former cruelty and rapines was still fresh and piercing, he became generally hated: so hated, that there wanted nothing to dispatch him, but some fit occasion. What this occasion was, is by divers Authours diversly related, though all agreeing in the maine. Our Ecclesiasticall Historians agree jointly, that the Emperour had given him licence to convert the Temple of Mithras, or the sun, which had beene long time out of use, into a Christian Church: and that the Christians finding in it great heaps of slaughtered bodies, which had beene offered to that idoll, expoled them to the publicke view, thereby to make the irreligion and impiety of the Gentiles, the more odious. Netled with which, they fell together on their Bishop, whom before they deadly hated, and slew him in the very place. By Ammianus Marcellinus it is thus related, that passing once by the goodly Temple dedicated to the Genius of the place, (perhaps that consecrated to Serapis) with many of the

the people, according to the custome, wayting on him: flexis ad eodem ipsam luminibus, quomodo, inquit, stabit hoc sepul- Lib. 22. cap. 28.
chrum: Casting his eyes upon it, after a scornfull fashion, how long (said he) shall these old ruines continue undemolished? Vpon report of which, the Gentiles furiously enraged, and hearing in the very nicke, that their Governour was newly dead; they greedily apprehended both the occasion, and the opportunitie; not quieting themselves, till they had torne the man so hated, into almost a thousand peeces. On both sides it is well agreed in the maine and substance; though differing a litle, in the circumstance: both parties, as well the Christians as the Gentiles, testifying this, that as his life was bloudy, so his death was shamefull.

(6) I say his death was shamefull, in that it was inflicted on him, for so vile a cause; it being a most certaine truth, that causa, and not pæna, facit Martyrem. For howsoever probably the Gentiles might begin the uproare; as loth to see themselves derided, and their Temples ruined; yet the whole people generally were interested in his death; all greedie of revenge for those many injuries, which they suffered by him. Of any yet, that say he died, either to witnes to the trueth of the holy Gospell, or for the testimony of a good conscience: I must confesse my selfe to seeke. Sure I am Epiphanius tels us, that he was not done to death in the defence of Gods truth and Gospell, and hee reasons thus; λέξει δ' αὖ τις ὅτι τὸ ἔργον τελευτῶντος, ἐκ οὗ ἐμάρτυρον, &c. Hæres. 76.
But some perhaps will say, was not this George a Martyr, that suffered these things of the Gentiles? yea verily, saith he, had he indured those miseries in testimony of the truth; or had that cruell death betide him through the malice of the heathen for the confession of his faith in Iesus Christ; then had hee beene a Martyr, and indeed a chiefe one; ἐκ τῶν ἢ τὸ αἶπον διὰ τῶν εἰς χεῖρὸν ὁμοφροσύνης, &c. But this, saith he, was not the cause of Georges suffering; but rather for that all the time of his being Bishop, hee had oppressed the people, despoiled them of their goods, and many other wayes incensed them; all the particulars whereof wee have

Lib. 22. cap. 28.

shewne already. Let Ammonius tell the story, and he prepares the way unto it with a relation of those many insolencies wherewith he had provoked that people. As namely, that he had incensed the Emperour against them, accusing them, ut ejus recalcitrantes imperio, of disobedience unto his commandments, and that forgetting that he was indeed a Bishop, ad delatorum anse feralia desciscibat, hee was become a tale-teller, an informer. And amongst other things, that hee had buzzed into the eares of the credulous Emperour, that all the houses in the City which had beene built by Alexander the great, at the publique charges, emolumentis ararij accedere deberent, ought to be answerable and accomptant unto the Exchequer. Which his ill offices being fresh in memory, and meeting with a people that were apt to mischief, they greedily apprehended, the occasion offred, to dispatch the Tyrant. Consult with Nazianzen, and he will easily informe you, that not the Gentiles only, but the Alexandrians generally, οἱ καὶ Ἀλεξανδρίων δῆμος οὐκ ἐνδοκίμοι οὐδ' αὖτε πω ἀμετεῖαν, not able longer to indure him, inflicted that most miserable death upon him. Nay, Socrates and Sozomen both say expressly, that this execution was by some men imputed not at all unto the Gentiles; but to the friends and fautors only of Athanasius: and the matter well made up, if so the Gentiles may be drawne to take part among them. For which cause they produce the letters of the Emperour Julian unto those of Alexandria, out of which they observe, and rightly, that not the Christians severally, but the people joynly, are condemned for it. Socrates gives this reason of it, Ἐγὼ καὶ Γεώργιος, &c. for George, saith hee, had long beene very burdensome and grievous unto all the City: καὶ διὰ τὸ τοῦ ἐξουσιῶν φίλον ἔχον τὰ πλεῖστα, and thereupon the multitude were easily inflamed to tumult and sedition. And which is most of all, if Athanasius may be credited, as no doubt he may, the Gentiles of all others had least cause to disaffect him, he being, as his actions shewed him, μεθ' ὅλων χριστιανῶν, ἀλλὰ καὶ ὅλων μάλιστα τὰ καὶ εἰδῶν, more zealous of their Idols, then of the Christian faith, which he understood not. All pregnant proofes that

George.

Orat. 21.

Socr. l. 6. 3.

Orat. 1. contra
Arian. p. 290.

George the Arian was done unto that shamefull death, not for religion which hee regarded not, but for the many villanies which he had committed.

(7) I have the more at large related the whole History of this bloody tyrant, because wee may the sooner see, how little probability there is in this, that he should ever steal into that credit in the Church, as to be reckoned for a Martyr. Wee doe not doubt to make it evident anon, that our St. George was honoured as a Saint and Martyr, in the time of Pope Gelasius, yea and before, during the life also of St. Ambrose. Suppose wee then, that George the Arian suffered death anno. 361, about which time St. Ambrose flourished, though not yet a Bishop, and that Gelasius entred upon the Church of Rome anno 492. Let this, I say, be granted, or let it only be supposed, and shall we thinke it possible, that in so small a tract of time, if not the same time, the Church should be so much mistaken, to honour such a barbarous and bloody Tyrant for a Saint? This is, me thinkes, not likely; and I must crave some longer time, before I dare beleve it. But George (say they) was by the Arians reckoned for an holy Martyr. What if he were? Shall wee conceive the Church to be so carelesse of her selfe, and in her purest times, as to afford him roome in her common Calendar and Martyrologies, upon the comendation of the Arian Hereticks. I doubt it much. But what if we should make deniall to this αὐτὸς ἦν, and say, that George the Arian was not reputed for a Martyr, no not by those of the same party? If wee should say so, I see not yet, what might be justly said against us. Certaine I am, that Epiphanius saith, he was no Martyr, as before we noted. And I am also sure, that Nazianzen, instead of calling him a Martyr, saith of him, that he was ἡλικὸς καὶ ἀδίκος, ὁ δὲ ἐν τῷ βίῳ καὶ θανάτῳ, a blast of wickenesse, a staine of piety, and a forerunner of the Devill. Excellent evidence to informe us what opinion the Christian Church had entertained and recorded of him: how most impossible it is, that she should ever be so carelesse of her selfe, or so forgetfull of the man and his many villanies, as to repute him for a Martyr. Certaine

Lib. 22. c. 29.

Hæres. 76.

taine I also am, that Ammianus Marcellinus hath recorded, that his accursed body being first torne in peeces, was afterwards consumed with fire: and all the ashes of it raked up together by the people, and cast into the sea: And this they did, lest else they might be recollected, and a Temple built in honour of them: even as we see it done (saith hee) to others of the Christian religion, who suffering grievous torments, and dying in a constant perseverance in their faith, are by that Sect entituled Martyrs; Idemque (saith he) ne collectis supremis, ades illis extraherentur, ut reliquis, qui deviare à religione compulsi perituros cruciabiles poenas, ad usque gloriosam mortem intemerata fide progressi, & nunc Martyres appellantur. So then, it is affirm'd by Epiphanius, that hee was no Martyr; by Marcellinus that his ashes were all cast into the sea, that so he might not bee reputed as a Martyr: and therefore by what good authority it may bee proved, hereafter, that he was reckoned for a Martyr, we are yet to seek. Which being so, I cannot choose but marvell, how Epiphanius is produced by Doctor Reynolds first, and afterwards by Innius, and by Polanus, as a reproover of I know not whom, some certaine Quidams, some imprudenter Christiani, for worshiping the Arian George as an holy Martyr. For in the place alledged, that reverend Father writing against the Ammei, tels us this of them, that their Founder was one Aetius, promoted to the dignity and office of a Deacon by that George of Alexandria, who was so cruelly torne in peeces by the people. Which told, hee makes a query, not as from them, but of himselfe, whether the man that had so suffered by the Gentiles, might not bee justly called a Martyr, and thereunto returns an answer negatively, that hee was not so to bee accounted, as before wee noted from that Author. Not one word more then this in Epiphanius, touching the Arian George his being reckoned a nonnullis, for a Martyr; and therefore we must leave both this, and the Vernantamen colit caput, which comes after, to his bare assertion.

(8) But put the case, that Epiphanius had affirmed, as much as Doctor Reynolds would faine have him; viz. that George

George the Arian, was by the Anomai reckoned as an holy Martyr; what shall wee say if Epiphanius were mistaken in the grounds of his opinion. In the conclusion of that passage, he tells us, that he did relate the history of this George, for no other reason, but that he was to speak of Actius, the founder of that sect, τὸν αὐτὸν κατὰ τὴν διδασκαλίαν, who by this George was made a Deacon. What then if Actius were not made Deacon by this George? then certainly as Epiphanius was mistaken, so had the Anomai no pretence of reason, to worship George the Arian as an holy Martyr. For Actius in very deed, was not made Deacon by this George of Alexandria, but by Leontius Patriarch of Antiochia. So Socrates in his Ecclesiasticall History, Ἀπὸ τοῦ αὐτοῦ, Lib. 2. cap. 16. ἐποίησεν αὐτὸν, καὶ Λεοντίου τῆς τῆς Ἀποστολῆς ἐποποιῶν, χειροτονήσας. Which in the selfe same words is repeated also, by Suidas in his Lexicon. To the same purpose Sozomen, ἦν δὲ τότε (Actius) διδασκὼν τῆς Ἀποστολῆς ἐκκλησίας, Lib. 4. cap. 11. ἐποίησεν αὐτὸν ἐπίσκοπον. Actius was made a Deacon of the Church of Antiochia, by Leontius. But not to trust to them only, whom we have formerly condemned for their unskillfull handling of the history of those times; S. Athanasius saith the same: viz. that Actius, because hee did support the Arian Heresie, was by Leontius made Deacon.

He ἐπεὶ, καὶ Ἀπὸ τοῦ αὐτοῦ ὁ ἐπίσκοπος διδασκὼν ἡγήσθη, as that Father hath it. Its true, that George the Arian, did ascertain this Actius, although not long. Which, whether it may be sufficient to make the Anomai so devoted to his memory, as that they onely should repute him for a Martyr, whom all men els detested as a bloodie tyrant: I leave unto the judgement of any tolerable Reader.

(9) Wee will proceed a little further, in search of those nonnulli, those imprudentes Christiani, as Iunius calls them, which are supposed to worship George of Alexandria, as an holy Martyr: and I would faine know who they were, and of what condition. We have already scene out of Athanasius, Nazianzen, Epiphanius, and Anomianus, how little there was in him which might merit good opinion, eyther dead or living. Extremely hated whiles he lived, as it is in Saxamen, by all sorts of people. By those of better sort, and noble quality, ὡς ὑποφῶν αὐτῶν, for setting them at naught, and vilifying of their persons; and by the poorer ranke of people, ὡς τυραννίδος, by reason of his tyrannies; and by the Orthodox professors ὡς σπουδαίον αὐτῶν ἐκείνων, as forcing them to bee of his opinion in matters of Religion; and by the Gentiles, ὅτι ἡ θύειν αὐτῶν, &c. because hee had prohibited them to sacrifice, and hold their wonted festivalls; by all in generall, for whispering false and dangerous tales against them into the eares of the credulous Prince Constantius, as Ammianus hath recorded. Who now are left to worship George the Arian, as an holy Martyr? If neither of the better sort, nor of the poorer, nor any of the Orthodox professors, nor of the Gentiles; then all that possibly can be hoped for, is, from those of the Arian faction, and yet from such of them only, as were neither of the better sort, nor of the poorer; which were none at all. Adde, that as Ammianus tells us, hee was so generally hated, and by all indifferently, that no man proferd opposition in his defence, to preserve his person: which had they done they might without all question, have saved his life. Pote-

Lib. 9. cap. ult.

Lib. 23. cap. 29.

rant q. miserandi homines (he meanes this George, Dracontius and Diodorus, that suffered with him) ad crudele supplicium ducti, Christianorum adjumento defendi; ni omnes Georgij odio indiscrete flagrassent, as that Author hath it. If so, if no man loved him whiles he lived; or rather if he were so generally hated, by men of all conditions; wee may beleeve in reason, that they were not very forwards, to give him any kinde of honour being dead. And for the Arian party, it is not to be doubted, but that in Alexandria, considering how long a sway that heresie had borne in those parts and countries; they had both power and strength sufficient, to have saved their Bishop, had they list. So that we may, if that proceeding might be warrantable in a matter controverted; demand of Doctor Reynolds, or those that do allow his judgement, if they, or any of them, can bring us one idoneum testem, which saith, that George of Alexandria, was reckoned as a Martyr, even by those of the Arian party. I am sure they cannot. Tis true Baronius saith it, but he onely saith it; and Ammianus whom he citeth, tells us no such matter. And for Baronius I hold him no idoneus testis, to be beleev'd upon his word; especially in things so long before him.

am

(10) But be it so. Suppose that George the Arian was of Cappadocia, and that he was reputed as a Martyr, by the Anomei, or the Arian heretickes; what prooffe is this; that therefore George our Martyr, must be their George the Arian? Surely none. And therein certainly Doctor Reynolds hath no other argument, then a conceit first, that so it might be; and afterwards a resolution, that so it should be. Not to disprove therefore that which is no otherwise asfirm'd, then by conj.ecture: wee will serdowne in brieffe the infinite differences, between our holy Martyr, and their George the hereticke. First in their times, ours suffering under Diocletian; theirs, under Julian: and in the cause, ours dying in defence of the holy Gospel; theirs, for the many insolencies, which hee had committed: and in the instrument, ours dying by the command of a cruell Emperour; theirs, by the hand of an enraged multitude: and in the manner of their deaths, ours being beheaded; theirs, torne in peeces: and in the disposition of their bodies, after death, ours being decently interd; theirs, burnt to ashes, and those ashes cast into the sea: and in their callings, ours being a professed Soldier; theirs, a Prelate: and in their parentage, ours being borne of noble parents; theirs, the sonne onely of a poore Fuller: and in their age, ours scarce attayning unto twenty; theirs, having runne through many offices, and ecclesiasticall preferments: and lastly, in the place of execution, ours being put to death in Nicomedia, the regall City of the lesser Asia; and theirs in Alexandria, the chiefe Towne of Africa: not to say any thing of their different countries, which is the matter controverted. If therefore George the Arian, must be George our Martyr, because the Arian George (for so we will suppose it) was a Cappadocian, and worshipped as a Martyr, (suppose that too) by the Arian heretickes: then russet may bee greene, and white may may be yellow, because colours all ; or Martin Luther may be Martin Marre-Prelate, because both Martins. But of this inference it is enough to say a little : and therefore on unto the residue of the Doctors arguments.

(II) The residue in that Discourse of Doctor Reynolds, is a collection of those severall passages which seeme to have beene taken out of the Arians Legend of their George of Alexandria ; or rather by them thrust into the history of St. George the Martyr. Of this sort Doctor Reynolds reckoneth the conflict betweene him and Athanasius the Magician, extant (saith he) in Metaphrastes and Pasicates, as also in Vincentius and Antoninus ; together with the fable of the Persian Dacianus, first made a King (saith he) by the Arian Legends, and after so reported in the Martyrology of Bede, and others. Vnto the first of these, touching Athanasius, wee have already answered in our third Chapter ; observing only here, that there is nothing of this Athanasius, in that written by Pasicates (although the Doctor please to say it) that Antoninus, though hee in briebe relates the story, gives not that name or any else to the Magician ; which caution I doe also meet with in Iacobus de Voragine. Touching the Persian Dacianus, and what may be alleadged in their defence by whom that passage is related ; this wee shall borrow leave to deferre a little, untill we produce such evidence as speakes on our side. And as for Alexandra, the wife of Diocletian, as the Greeke writers ; of Dacianus, as the Latine generally affirme : seeing she is not brought to testifie against us, and that already shee hath beene examined, we doe discharge her of the Court. Seeing, I say, shee is not brought to testifie against us ; and I say so justly. For Doctor Reynolds, who had canvassed over all the story, to finde what possibly hee could that might make it doubtfull and suspected : speakes not one word or syllable of this Alexandra. Which may perhaps imply, that there is more of reall truth in those passages which concerne her, then hath beene granted hitherto. The rather since Pasicates, who is all silence in the businesse of Athanasius and his undertaking, is large enough in his relations of this Lady. That Diocletian had a wife, is very likely; for hee had a daughter married to Galerius: and why this wife of his might not be so converted as the story testifieth, what may perswade us not to credit so many Authors being consonant in the report. If any reason thus, per me licet, I shall not hinder him. I am no enemy to any circumstance of the story which may well be justified. But if it rather may be taken, as I thinke it may, for a remaine or fragment of the Arian Legend; I have expressed my selfe already, what I conceive to be the meaning.

Diocletian

(12) To end this tedious disputation, (for I will borrow both the resolution and the words of Sir Walter Raleigh, in a case of equall controversie) I holde it a sure prooffe in examination of such opinions, as have once gotten the credit of being generall, so to deale, as Pachavius did in Capua with the multitude, finding them desirous to put all the Senators to death. He locked the Senators up in the State-house, and offered their lives to the peoples mercy, obtayning first thus much, that none of them should perish, before the Commonalty had elected a better in his place. As fast as any name was read, all of them cried out instantly, Let him die: but in the substituting of another, some notorious vice of the person, or basenesse of his condition, or insufficiency of his quality; made each new one that was offered to be rejected. So that finding the worse and lesse choyce, the further and the more they sought, it was finally agreed, that the old ones should be kept for lacke of better. To which the resolution of an English-man, wee will adjoine this caveat of a Spaniard: Sine ergo plebem, probabilissimam opinionem, praesertim qua penitus insedit & inveteravit, cum moribus suis retinere. lib. 11, cap. 5. So having done our parts in the defence of St. Georges history, so farre as it concernd the beating downe of that strong opposition, which was made against him: our next care is to justifie it, out of such monuments of learning and antiquity, as may for ever keepe it free and searelesse of the like assaults. In which the Doctors third conclusion doth present it selfe to be examined, viz:

thag:

that never any George of Cappadocia, but George the Arian, hath beene delivered for a Martyr, in any Author worthy credit. On therefore, οὐκ ἔστιν. Which that wee may the better doe, we will repose our selves a little, till we have taken out commission, for the examining of witnesses on S. Georges side: concluding heere, the first and most adventurous part of this discourse; this partem arandasmu, as they use to call it.

The end of the first Part.

CHAP.

THE HISTORY OF

St. GEORGE, asserted, &c.

The second part.

CHAP. I.

(1) The Name and Etymology of George. (2) The Story of Saint George by Metaphrastes. (3) The time of that Author, and the reason of his name. (4) The opinion of him in the Greeke Church. (5) This Metaphrastes not the same with Simcon the Schoolemaster. (6) The Country, Parentage, and first fortunes of Saint George. (7) The state of the Roman Empire at that time: and persecution then beginning. (8) The speech of George unto the Tyrants: his torments, and his death. (9) The manner of his death according to Friar Anselme, and the English Story. (10) The intervening passages which occur in Metaphrastes. (11) Arguments Authorized negative, of what credit in the Schooles.

(I):

WE are now come unto the second part of St. Georges History, a part wherein we shall find many friends, and few enemies: for now wee are to deale with those that speake for us, and will not stick to justifie the Story of this blessed Martyr upon their oathes. But first we will dilate a little on his Name, lest else mistaking there, we may perchance have all our processe overthrowne; and this wee will will the rather, because the name doth seeme to carry with it the Offe or Omen of good luck, and in a manner did preface him for a Martyr. The name of George, not to proceed in it more Grammatically, is originally Greeke; derived ἀπὸ τοῦ Γεωργίου, which is, to till the earth, or to play the Plough-man. It signifieth an Husbandman, and therefore Suidas doth expound the name by Γεωργός, a Tiller, or labourer of the earth. So Camden in his Remaines, George, Gr. Husbandman, the same with Agricola: and thereunto the famous Spencer thus alludeth in the words before recited;

Fayr Qu. l. i.
cant. 10.

*There thee a Plough-man all unwearied found,
As he his toylsome toame that way did guide,
And brought thee up in Plough-man state to bide;
Whereof GEORGOS be thee gave to name, &c.*

The Greeke Horology, or houres of prayer, thus descants on it; Γεωργεύεις ἀπὸ τοῦ Θεοῦ, ἀνδρίδης ἡ εὐσεβίας ἡ ἀρετῆς ἡ μυστικῆς, &c. Since thou art tilled and manured by the hand of God, expresse thy self a worthy workman, or husbandman in the things of godlinesse; reaping the harvest of thy vertues: for though thou sowedst in teares, thou shalt reap in ioy. To this the learned Doctor Reynolds hath alluded also, as before I noted, where he informs us, that all true Christian people, (Quos πατρὶον Dei appellat Apostolus, 1 Cor. 3.) whom the Apostle calls Gods Husbandry, ought to make warre against the Dragon, mentioned in the Apocalypse. But this allusion, or conceit, noted before him, by George Wicelius, in these words. Esse in quicunque censere Christianus, Georgius, idque reipsa. Pater enim celestis Τεωργός ἐστ, inquit Εὐαγγελιστὰ: Nos huius mystici Agricola πατρὶα sumus, sicut ait Apostolus. Bethou (saith hee) whoever thou art, that art called a Christian, bee thou a George; and not in name onely, but in very deed. For as wee have it in the Gospell, Our heavenly Father is a Husbandman: and wee, as the Apostle tels us, are Gods husbandry. I said before, that this name of George was ominous, and in a manner did preface

In S. George.

prefage him for a Martyr ; thus Serrarius, not without good reason, descants on it.

Falci angurio tibi nomina fulta, Georgi, Terra tuo siquidem sanguine culia fuit.

Thy name presag'd that like a Plough-man good,
Thou shouldst the Church make fruitfull with thy blood.

And not much different from this, the Greeke Anthology thus plays upon the plainfong of our Martyrs name.

Σοφὸς ἐπαγγελήσας ἃ δέσιν ἀπέσπν
Τούτου ἐνδήθυμας αἱμάτων σου, &c.

(2) But of the Name enough. The Story of our Martyr, wee have made choice to borrow out of Simon Metaphrastes. For notwithstanding wee finde the History set downe at large by others of the later times, and that not few of those that went before him both in time and learning, have touch'd at it ; yet wee have taken him to speake first for us, to open, as it were, our Bill ; reserving all the rest as seconds, to make good his assertions. I know wee might with greater glory, and more seeming shew of Antiquity, have cast this burthen upon him that calls himselfe S. Georges servant, Pasocrates by name : the first which did commit to writing, the Death and Actions of St. George ; and one (if such a one there was) which might relate the Story with most assurance, as being alwayes with him, even unto his suffering. And verily, had wee beene as well assured of the authority of the writer, as the antiquity of the worke, wee would have done it. The history ascribed unto him, is extant, as before I said, in an old Greeke Manuscript in the publique Library at Oxon : and agrees punctually with that Latine copy which we finde in Lippoman and Surinus. Only that Manuscript gives no name unto the Author, nor tells us, that he was St. Georges servant, as that doth in Lippoman, which Lippoman perhaps might finde in that of Cypria fer- rata,

/ aditi.

rata, whence he had his copy. This therefore being thus uncertaine, both for the Author, and the time in which he lived; wee rather choose to tell the story out of Metaphrastes; in whom there is not any thing omitted worth our reading, which is found extant in the other. Of whom, and of the time in which he lived, and that opinion which he carrieth in the world, we will speake a little; because wee have made choice of him to declare first for us, and it concerns us, not to have our businesse opened by a man suspected, by one of no esteeme and credit with the learned. When that is done, we will not beg you to beleieve him any further, than in Sir Walter Rawleighs judgement we may give credit unto Annius and his Authors: namely so farre as others writing on the same Argument, concur with him, and justifie his words as warrantable and historicall.

Descrip. Eccl.

Lib. 2. cap. 26.

(3) And first, the Age in which he lived, is diversly reported. Bellarmino on the credit of Baronius, hath placed him in the middle of the ninth Century: Iohn Vossius in his booke De Gr. Historicis, hath ranked him in the yeere 1060. Oraus Volateran, our learned Jewell, and Hefysichus, make him a babe of yesterday; a writer of the fourteenth Century, no older. Of this last computation more hereafter: the other two, being the worst of them more probable then this; though but one true. These two both built upon the same ground, viz. the time of Michael Psellus; and therefore if wee can resolve upon his time, wee have found the other. By Bellarmino it is affirm'd that Psellus was alive anno 850. Michael the third, together with his mother Theodora, then ruling in the East: which Psellus made a funerall Oration in the praise of Metaphrastes. This last acknowledged to bee true by Vossius; but then hee tels us, and that upon the credit of Cedrenus, that Michael Psellus, τῶν φιλοσόφων ὑπάτος, as that Author calls him, was Tutor unto Constantinus Ducas, who began his Empire in the yeere 1061. But in the sifting of the businesse, it may perhaps appeare, that Vossius is not led to this by any argument, more then his owne opinion. Non negare possum (saith hee) is temporibus (viz. sub Mich. 3.) vixisse quendam Michael. Psellum; nam id et perit

Loco quo supra.

perit testatur Iohannes Curopalates: sed nego istum nobilem illum esse Philosophum, cuius permulta hodieque supersunt. Hec cannot choole but grant, a Michael Psellus to have flourished in the time of Michael and Theodora: but that this was the Michael Psellus whose writings are still extant, this he denieth. So then, it being so farre granted, that Michael Psellus was alive, according to the time assigned by Bellarmino, wee will according to that computation resolve of Sim. Metaphrastes, that he flourished in the ninth Centurie. When we see better reason to inforce the contrary, we shall not thinke it any shame, to alter our opinion. As for the name of Metaphrastes, it was given our Author in reference unto a worke of his, touching the Lives of Saints and Martyrs: which lives he had collected with indefatigable industry, out of severall Authors, himsele retayning the sense and matter of them, but otherwise delivering the Stories in words more proper and expresseive. So witnesseth Aloysius Lippomanus in his Preface, Ideoque & Metaphrasta nomen fuisse adeptum: παρὰ τοῦτο ἔκρινεν ἑνὶ ὀνόματι τὴν ἑλληνικὴν ὡς καὶ τὴν ἑλληνικὴν ὡς καὶ τὴν ἑλληνικὴν ὡς καὶ τὴν ἑλληνικὴν enim Græcè, Latine est Scripturam aliquam dilucidioribus verbis, sensu tamen & materia retentis, interpretari.

(4) This worke thus brought together, became of good esteeme and credit in the Eallerne parts: the reputation of the Writer, and the opinion had of his good performance in that kind, concurring both together, to further the admission of it in their Churches. For of the man himsele, it is affirm'd by Lippomanus, that by the Grecians hee is honour'd as a Saint: the 27. of November, being assign'd him for his Feast-day, Psellus, a man of speciall quality himsele, hath played the Panegyrist in his commendation: and therein added to the fame of Metaphrastes, Adde bonum est laudari à laudato viro. Nay, he professeth himsele in a manner nonplust, and at a stand, as being utterly unable to commend sufficiently so rare a man. For in this wise beginneth his panegyrick, Cum magnam Simeonem laudare Apud Surtum statuerim, cuius per universum orbem & nomen & res gesta ce-Novemb. 27 lebrantur, nescio quibusnam verbis ntar in eo laudando, vel quidnam ex omnibus dicturus, sufficientem prabebo laudem, &c.

K

This

Concil Flor.
Anno 1436.

Sec. 6.

This was enough for one. See in the next place how much the Fathers of the great Councell held at Florence, the greatest in the later ages of the Church, have magnified his name, and extold his learning. I say the greatest in the later ages of the Church, both in relation to the parties there assembled, being the choicest of the East and Westerne Churches : and for the businesse then in hand, being an union and attonement betwixt Rome and Greece. For vouching him and his authority, in that great point, De filioq; then debated ; hee is summon'd thus : Imprimis ergo Sim, Metaphrastes vestris in Ecclesijs celeberrimus, accedat, &c. Sess. 7. But what need more be said than that of Theod. Balsamon, in his Commentaries on the Canons made in Trullo : who though he be by Bellarmino called Schismatick, as being of the Church of Greece : is not the lesse to be beleueed in the present businesse. For there was great complaint made in that Councell, how hideously the lives of Saints were falsified by Heretickes, which 63. Canon, together with the resolution of the Fathers, wee have recited in the second Chapter of the former part of this Discourse. Hereupon Balsamon takes occasion to congratulate the felicity of the Church, in those latter times, and to commend withall, the paines and excellent performance of our Author, in that Argument. χαῖς τὸν νυν τῷ μαχαρίτῃ Μεταφραστῇ τῷ τῶν ὑμῶν. εἰς ὅσον σπουδαίῳ καὶ ἀληθεῖας, πολλοῖς πόνοις καὶ ἰδρωσὶ κατακνήναι. All praise (saith he) be unto blessed Metaphrastes, who with such infinite paines and labour, hath set out the glorious sufferings of the Martyrs, for the holy truth : εἰς ὄμιον Θεῷ, καὶ διότι ἀνέζησαν τῷ ἀγίῳ ὑμῶν. Both to Gods glory, and their honour. More cannot easily be said in Writers honour. It is true, that many times Baronius doth seeme to censure him, for mingling fables with his Story : and the particulars for the which he chargeth him, he hath, upon occasion as they came into his way, particularly noted. But not a word to the disparage of this Storie of Saint George, in all his volumes. Adde that the Cardinall is himselfe so faulty in that kind, that it might seeme a comfort to him, to have some others share with him the same infamy : and then Baronius censure will bee no prejudice either to our cause, or Author.

(5) Bellarmino giveth this note of him, and the note is good: Fideri aliquas historias Sanctorum, additas à posterioribus; That many Histories seeme to be added to the worke of Metaphrastes, by some of lesser standing; those namely which were added to the Catalogue of Saints, after the death of the first Author. Which note of his, together with the testimonies of Balsamon, and Pselus, do most abundantly tell their errour, which make him such a Puifné: and in part also faitsie it. The first of those, that did disparage thus our Author; Raphael Volaterran: and in him we reade it thus. Simoon Constantinopolitanus ludimagister, circiter anno abhinc 200. composuit Græcè Metaphrastes, Id est, Sanctorum vitas, quæ singulis mensibus propria leguntur, habenturque in Bibliotheca Vaticana. I thus translate it in the words of Bishop Jewell, This Simoon Metaphrastes, whom Master Harding calleth a Græke Writer, was a poore Schoole-master in Constantinople, and wrote Saints lives, which may well be called, The Legend of Ives, and lived two hundred yeeres agoe, and not above. Thus hath Holwicus placed his Simoon Constantinopolitanum, in the yeere 1306. which was two hundred yeeres exactly, before the time of Volaterran: And so Orens in his Nomenclator, Simoon Metaphrastes, Constantinopolitanus, scripsit de vitis Sactorum, Sec. 14. So they, but this can nothing prejudice our Simoon Metaphrastes, extoll'd so highly by Michael Psellus, who liv'd in their account which speaketh the least, Anno 1060. so highly praised by Balsamon, who wrote about the yeere 1191. above an hundred yeeres before this Schoole-master, was talk'd of. Likely it is, this Schoole-master, might adde those Lives unto the worke of Metaphrastes; which by the Cardinal are noted to be of latter date, and a lesse standing. And this I thinke the rather, because Nicephorus, who liv'd then with this Schoole-master, if such there was; hath told us touching Simoon Stylites, the latter of that name, how that one Simoon Magister (Some Schoole-master perhaps) had writen of him; but not so learnedly as the occasion did require. Ex hunc usque (de Sim. viz. Stylite) sermone omnis celebrantur brantur, a Simeone Magistro, quanquam non ita doctè ut magnitudo rerum postulavit, conscripta. But be he what hee will, and even as ignorant as a Pedant may be in nature, it is no matter: certaine I am, hee cannot be that Metaphrastes, so much fam'd by Psellus, Balsamon, and a whole Councell; not that, whom wee haue chosen to report the storie of Saint George, and is now ready to relate it.

(6) Of Metaphrastes hitherto. Wee now proceed unto the storie, which he tels us, thus. Georgius in Cappadocia, non obscuro loco, è Christianis parentibus natus; in vera pietate jam inde educatus fuerat. Hic cum ad pubertatem nondum pervenisset, patrem in certamine pietatis egregie pugnantem amisit; è Cappadociaque cum matre in Palestinam, unde erat oriunda, se contulit: ubi multa illi possessiones; et ingens erat hereditas. Ob generis igitur nobilitatem, cum jam et corporis pulchritudine et etate ad militiam aptus esset; Tribunus militum est constitutus. Quo quidem in munere, cum virtutem suam in bellicis certaminibus, sèque strenuum militem ostendisset; Comes à Diocletiano constitutus est, antequam christianus esse cognosceretur. Cum autem eo tempore mater è vita discessisset, majoris cupidus dignitatis, maximam è divitiis sibi relictis partem accipit, et ad Imperatorem profectus est. Tunc annum viceffimum ætatis impleverat. So farre the words of Metaphrastes, which I haue therefore here put downe at large, because it is the ground worke of the whole businesse. I translate it thus. Saint “George was borne in Cappadocia, of Christian Parents, “and those not of the meanest qualitie: by whom hee was “brought up in true Religion, and the feare of God. Hee “was no sooner past his childhood, but he lost his father, “brauely encountring with the enemies of Christ: and “thereupon departed with his afflicted Mother into Pale- “stine, whereof shee was a native; and where great “fortunes and a faire inheritance did fall unto “him. Thus qualified in birth, and being also of an “able body, and of an age fit for employment in the wars, “he was made a Colonell. In which employment he gave “such testimonies of his valour, and behav'd himselfe so no“bly, that forthwith Dioclesian not knowing yet that hee was

“was a Christian, advanc’d him to the place and dignitie
 “of a Count Imperiall. About this time, his Mother dyed:
 “and he augmenting the heroicke resolutions of his mind,
 “with the increase of his revenue, did presently apply him-“himselfe unto the Court and service of his Prince, his “twentieth yeere being even then compleat and ended.

Pasirates, or at the least, that storie which is intituled by his name, comprehends the birth & fortunes of S. George, in a lesser compasse, though the same in substance: ἁγίου γεωργίου

ἑν ὁ ἄρχοντος Χειροῦ μαρτυρῆς Γεωργίου, Καππαδοκίης τὸ γένος ἐν γένει ἵππῳ ἐπὶ τῇ τοῦ αἵματος λαμπρότητι. Ἐνώσει δὲ αἰὲν κακοποιήσας, περὶ πάντας ἡμῶν ἀρετὰς. Saint George (saith hee) that holy “Martyr was by birth a Cappadocian, of Noble parentage, “remarkable both for his vertue, and his riches: a man

“indued with a celestiall kinde of wisdom, and thereup“on advanced unto many offices. It followeth after, (which I marvell how it was omitted in Lippemans translation)

κόμης γεννηθέντα δὲ ἔπειτα πολλὰν εὐδοκίαν ἔχοντα, that after much proofe had of him, he was made an Earle. Simeon Metaphra- stes also in a Panegyricke made for the festivall of our Martyr, tels us this also of him, that he was young in yeeres, but old in wisdom, etate juvenis, sapientia canus: and that, ab

ipsa pueritia in armorum certaminibus excellebat, he had beene famous in the warres from his very child-hood. Thus having briefly touched both his qualitie and endowments, we should immediately proceed to his atchievements, but that an answer must first be made to old Fryer Anselme, and in him unto Sir Walter Raleigh, both of them make Saint

George to be a Palestinian, not a Cappadocian: and tell us that the very house made happy by his birth, is standing to this day, and is called commonly Saint Georges. And first for Fryer Anselme, (hee was a Fryer of the order of Saint Francis) he tels us this, De Acon versus orientem ad quinque ne- lencas occurrit casale quoddam, quod S. Georgius dicitur; quia ibi natus fuit, & situm est inter montana in valle. This by Sir

Walter Raleigh, and in almost the selfesame words, though

“in different languages, is reported thus: Five miles from “Ptolemais (which is the same with Acon) towards the East,

*Describe. terra Sanct. apud Ca-
 nis. antiq. lesio.*

"East, is the Castle of Saint George, where hee was borne, the valley adjoyning bearing the same name. This last indeed we grant, that there is such a valley, and that it is so called, and that there is a Castle, and an Oratorie in it, consecrated to our Martyr: yet this not in relation to his birth, which none besides themselves have thought on: but as I take it, rather unto his possessions which lay hereabouts, & might occasion that their error. For as wee are informed out of Metaphrastes, hee had a faire inheritance, and large possessions in this country: which probably was this Castle, and the vale adjoyning, in memory of so brave a spirit, called Saint Georges. Iust, as Iosephus tells us, that there is a Village neere Damascus, called Abraham's house, which was not certainly his birth-place, but his place of habitation onely.

(7) Saint George thus being in the Court and service of the Emperour, it was not long before hee had occasion to expresse his vertue: which that we may the better weigh, we must a little looke upon the state of the Roman Empire as it then stood, and on the persecution which then did violently begin to afflict the Church. Know then that Diocletian being made Emperour by the armie, upon the death of Carnus, and finding that the burden was too weightie for him to sustaine alone, he joyned unto him in that honour, one of his fellow Souldiers, called Maximinian, reserving to himselfe the Easterne parts, at that time daily wasted by the, neighbouring Persians, and sending his Copartner into the West, where the Barbarians of the North, and Western Marches, were no lesse troublesome. But things not rightly yet succeeding to their wish, as well to keepe in quiet that which was peaceable, as to regaine such Provinces as had beene lost: they tooke unto themselves two Cesars, (for so the next Successors were then called,) viz. Galerius Maximianus, and Constantius Chlorus. Of these, the latter, was by his Parentage and birth, of Illyricum, and by, Augustus Maximinian, employed in Britaine, which was then revolted; The other was of Dacia, a neighbour by his Country, unto Diocletian, by whom, he was sent out Commander of his his Armies, against the Perſian. Thoſe thus engaged in the common ſervice of the State, and the affaires thereof in better order than before: the Emperours now out of action, converted all their force and fury on the Chriſtians, whom they afflicted with the greateſt and moſt ſavage perſecution of all others. For now not onely ſome part or other of the Church, was haraſſed and depopulated; but all at once a prey unto the ſword and tortures of the publicke Hangman: no corner of the Empire ſo farre diſtant from the Seates Imperiall, wherein there was not havocke made of Gods beloved. Interca Diocletianus in Oriente, Maximinianus in Occidente, vaſtari Eccleſias, affligi, interficij, Chriſtianos preceperunt: qua perſecutio omnibus ſere ante actis diuturnior, & immanior fuit. So Paul Oroſius, briefly, according to his wonted manner.

Hiſt. lib. 7

(8) The Perſecution thus reſolv'd on, and begun already in the Court and Seates Imperiall: and not ſo onely, but warrants granted out unto the Officers and Rulers of the Provinces, to ſpeed the execution; and that done alſo in a frequent Senate, the Emperour Diocletian there himſelf in perſon: S. George, not knowne as yet to be a Chriſtian, could containe no longer; but thus expoſed himſelfe unto their fury, and his owne glory. For thus it followeth in the Story. Cum igitur primo ſtatim die, tantum in Chriſtianos crudelitatem animadverſiſſet, &c. Omnem pecuniam & veſtem celeriter pauperibus diſtribuit, &c. & tertio Conſilii die, qua Senatus decretum confirmandum erat, &c. ipſe omni formidine rejecta, &c. in medio conſeſſu ſorti, & in hunc modum locutus eſt. Quonſque tandem O Imperator, & vos Patres Conſcripti, futuram veſtram in Chriſtianos augebitis, legeſq; adverſus eos iniquas ſancietis? &c. Eoſq; ad tam quam vos an vera ſit, religionem ignoratis, eos qui veram didicere compelletis? Hæc I dola non ſunt dii, non ſunt inquam. Nolite per errorem falſi. Chriſtus ſolus Deus eſt, idemque ſolus Dominus in gloria Dei patris. Aut igitur vos item veram agnoſcite religionem, aut certe eos, qui illam colunt, nolite per dimentiam veſtram perturbare. His verbis attoniti, & inopinata dicendi libertate percuſi, oculos ad Imperatorem omnes converterunt, audiri quidnam ei ad ea reſponderet, &c. When therefore

11 for George even in the first beginnings, had observed the 12 extraordinary cruelty of these proceedings, hee presently 13 put off his military abillments, and making dole of all his 14 substance to the poore : on the third Session of the Senate, 15 when the Imperiall decree was to be verified, quite void
 16 of feare, hee came in the Senate-house, and spake vnto
 17 them in this manner. How long most noble Emperour, 18 and you Conscript Fathers, will you augment your ty-19 rannies against the Christians ? How long will you enact 20 unjust and cruell Lawes against them ? Compelling those 21 which are aright instructed in the Faith, to follow that 22 Religion, of whose truth your selves are doubtfull. Your 23 Idols are no gods, and I am bold to say againe, they are 24 not. Be not you longer couzened in the same error. Our 25 Christ alone is God, he onely is the Lord, in the glory of 26 the Father. Either doe you therefore acknowledge that 27 Religion, which undoubtedly is true : or else disturbe not 28 them by your raging follies, which would willingly em-29 brace it. This said, and all the Senate wonderfully amazed 30 at the free speech and boldnesse of the man ; they all of 31 them turned their eyes upon the Emperour, expecting 32 what hee would reply : who beckoning to Magnentius, 33 then Confull, and one of his speciall Favourites, to return 34 an answer ; hee presently applied himselfe, to satisfie his 35 Princes pleasure. Hic propius ad se illū accersens, Equus inquit 36 sibi istius audacie in loquendo auctor est, &c. Calling him to 37 him, hee asked him what made him so audacious, and 38 bold in speech ; George answered, Veritas, the truth. The 39 Confull asked him further, what was that truth ; hee an-40 swerd, Christ, whose seruant he profest to be ; and that 41 in confidence of his master he had adventured in the mid-42 dest of the assembly for testimony of his Gospell. The 43 Emperour new knowing him, and loath to lose so tryed a 44 vertue, if it might bee saved ; wooes him with hopes of 45 greater honours ; advising him, ne etatis florem contumacia
 46 sua cruciatibus subiciat ; not to expose his youth to tor-
 47 ments by too much wilfulnesse. But hee continuing con-48 stant, was committed unto prison, loaded with irons, an 49 heavy.

heavy stone being laid flat upon his brest. The next day following, being demanded of the Emperour, if he persisted in his errors: he resolutely made answer, prius ipse torquendo fatigaberis, quam ego tortus; that sooner should the Emperour be weary of tormenting, then he of suffering. Despairing now of his reclaim, they bound him to the wheele [rota gladiis undiq; armata] and hackt his body with their swords, but that dispatched him not: a man in white vesture, as the people thought, being scene to comfort and assist him: Next was hee cast into the Limekills, and there kept three dayes together: whence comming out unhurt, they put upon him ferreas crepidas, a paire of iron shooes, fire-hot, and the nailes turned inwards; and so returned him to the prison, well whipt and buffeted. But seeing all was fruitlesse, and the S. unmoveable, at last the fatall sentence was pronounced against him, that hee should forthwith bee beheaded: which sentence was accordingly put in execution, and George invested with the glorious crowne of Martyrdome, upon the 23. of April; being then, as Pasicates reporteth, Good-Friday.

(9) For this the day of S. Georges sufferings, wee shall have prooffe enough hereafter, in those severall Martyrologies, which are to bee produced as witnesses. Prooffe also store enough for this, that he was beheaded: in which particulars, all Authors which have descended to particulars, agreed jointly. Onely the old Franciscan, Fryer Anselme, whom I lately mentioned, will have him end his sufferings in a flame of fire at Rama, in the Holy Land. For so it followeth in his text; In Berith occidit draconem, in Rama autem qua distat a Hierusalem per 20. miliaria, fertur fuisse combustus. 'Tis well they are so linked together, his Martyrdome by fire, and his encounter with the dragon: both being of the same medly. The Monke of Malmesbury hath stumbled somewhat neere upon this errour, not for the manner of his death, but the place thereof: which he delivereth on report, to be this Ramula or Rama. Ibi (saith hee) a dextra dimittentes maritima, pervenimus Ramulam, Civitatulam mura indi-

indigenæ, B. Georgii (sive cretensis) Martyris consuetudo. But this as he confesseth, he onely took upon report: and they that so reported were deceived in this, that finding how S. George had a faire Temple in the City, erected to his memory, they thought that there he had bene Martyred. The Lady Anne Comena, in the 8. of her Admirals or history of Alexis her father. After, was deceived also with the same error, which with her testimony of S. George, wee shall see hereafter. But for the place or scene of S. George's sufferings, in the next Chapter. I had almost forgot the doughty Author of the Seven Champions, who as hee makes the last achievement of S. George, to bee the killing of a bathing dragon in the land of Egypt: so doth he make his last, to bee a dangerous combat which hee hath with a poisonous dragon upon Darius's bank; wherein the dragon lost his life, and the poore Knight returned to Coventry, so extremely wounded, that he died soone after. And yet the foolish fellow, telle us expressly in his title, that there we have the true and certaine manner of his death. But as good lucke would have it, he left no fewer then three sonnes behind him, to comfort his afflicted people; and one of them, a matter deere worth our knowledge, was Guy that famous Earle of Warwicke; the other two forsooth, being preferred to place in Court. Of all that have adventured upon knight-hood errant, the most idle trifter.

(10) The residue in Metaphrastes contains in it many intervening passages, which concerne our Martyr, and his achievements: whereof some probable, some historicall, others suspected, if not thoroughly convinced, as Arian forgeries. To this last head I doe referre the undertaking of the Magician Athanasius, and the conversion of the Empresse Alexandra; in case some had not rather that the actions which concerne that Lady, should passe among those his achievements, which are counted probable. The Hereticks, those of the Arian cut, had bene, no question, busie about the Story of our Martyr, which Metaphrastes noted not, but took the story as he found it, not being curious in the choise of his materials. A man in whom I could have wished his his care and iudgement had beene unwearie to his fidelity. Then that S. George, occasionally was a meanes of turning many unto God, who seeing with what constancy he endured his torments, were thereby drawne to magnifie the name of Christ, of which sort were Proteoleon and Anatolius, men of especiall quality : I reckon as Historicall. The Greeke Menologies have them enrolled amongst the Martyrs. The like I also say of those, whom he converted in the prison ; of which see more, in our 3. Chapter. As probable I count his raising of a man that had long beene dead, whom he restored to life, and made his Profelyte ; and that he brought to life a poore farmers Oxe, his name Glycerius, who by the miracle, was converted. That also of his going with the Emperor unto the Temple of Apollo, as it is there related, may be justly credited. For there we finde it onely thus, that when Diocletian began by flattery to perswade him, to sacrifice unto their Idols: he said no more, but let us goe unto the Temple, Duos qui a vobis coluntur assecuri, to see what stuffe your gods are made of. Being there come, he went unto Apollo's image, and having made the signe of the crosse ; asked him, if he should offer sacrifice unto him, as unto a God. This when the Divell, in the Idol, had refused, S. George commanded him to forsake that Statua, and thereupon the Images fell downe in peeces. None knowes the Historie of Babilas, in the time of Iulian, but may credit this. But in the Latine Legends, it is other wise related. As viz. that he should tell the Emperour of his owne accord, that he was now content to offer sacrifice to the Roman deities, which said, the Church made trimme, the Priests in readinesse, and many of the people gathered there together to behold the alteration : hee calls upon the Lord, and presently upon his praier, downe came a fire from heaven, by which both Temple, Priest, and many thousands of the people were consumed. This, though himselfe relate it, accounted as an error (or a fable rather) by Antoninus Flo- Summa Histor.

rentinus ; Who guessing at some reasons, for which the pa- par. i. tit. 8. Si Et, sion of S. George was adjudged Apocryphall, makes this for one: Quod Diavolo dixerit paratum se sacrificare, si faceret popu-

populum ad Templum congregari, quo facto, oratione ejus igne Caelsti, totum Templum, &c. concremavit. And like enough that some such story, or rather fable, might bee extant in those acts of George, which by Gelasius were exploded. But as it is delivered by Metaphrastes, I see not any thing therein to deserve that censure.

(II) This is the summe of Metaphrastes, the substance of the history of our blessed Martyr; containing a description of his parentage and person, his country, fortunes, and achievements; and in the end of all, his death and suffering, in defence of the holy Gospell. All this, at least as much thereof as is of principall moment, and most necessary to the cause in hand; we doubt not to make good, by witnesses of speciall ranke, and of authority undeniable in things historical. Of which sort I count specially such tokens, by the which wee may discern him; as first his being, country, and his Martyrdome in generall: particularly the time and manner of it, the severall torments which hee suffered, and others of that quality: all which is testified by the learned, both in the East and Westerne Churches; and by so many also of the Protestant divines, as may suffice to make the story free from all farther question. But for the greatnesse of his parentage and fortunes, together with his honourable place about the Emperour, and other intervening passages above recited; these we will take upon the word of Metaphrastes, and such Greeke Writers as either have concurred with him or were led by him. For Metaphrastes living, as hee did, so long agoe; might very well have had the reading, of many an antient Author and record, now lost, both Christian & Pagan. Out of the which, being a man of ingenuiry and learning, he faithfully collected, though not with that επιβρα and exactnesse, as I wish hee had, what ever hee hath there delivered of our Martyr. Nor is it any argument of force against us, that no such Martyr is commemorated in Eusebius (which yet we grant not) who wrote the story of that last and greatest persecution: nor any of those circumstances above mentioned, extant in Bede, or Antoninus or Vincenius, both which are large enough in the expression sion of his story. For we know well enough that Argumenta ab auctoritate negative, are shamefully exploded in the Schooles of Logick; and that the argument would but be ridiculous, should any one conclude, that all the Silvian Kings of Italy, mentioned in our Chronologies, are to be rejected; because so many writers of the Roman histories, have spared to name them. Or that so many of the Martyrs (to come neere home) in the Roman Martyrologies are to be expunged; of whom no mention can be found in Eusebius History. For whereas it is generally affirmed, that many thousands in the tenth persecution under Diocletian, were crowned with Martyrdome: how few are there, comparatively, which are remembered by that Author? Indeed in points of faith, and morall duties, we may resolve it with the Fathers, non credimus, quia non legimus; and therefore I reſtaine my ſelfe to caſes of this quality; points hiſtoricall, wherein one Author hits commonly, what another miſſeth. Which ground thus laid, wee will proceed unto the juſtification of the hiſtory in Metaphraſtes; ſo much thereof eſpecially, as we conceive to be moſt materiall, to difference and diſtinguiſh this our Martyr, from George the Arian, to whom no part of all our ſtory is appliable. But we will firſt make cleere our paſſage in the removing of one blocke, which elſe may ſtumble us: and after, having pointed out the ſcene of this great action (which Metaphraſtes doth not ſpeake of) deſcend unto our evidence.

CHAP. II.

(1) Magnentius mentioned in the former Story, what hee was. (2) Diospolis or Lydda, not the place of St. Georges suffering, but of his buriall. (3) That Saint George suffered death at Nicomedia. (4) Priso, who is sanctified; and the error of Vincentius in it. (5) The former story justified in the generall by Eusebius. (6) The history of Saint George whether particularly extant in that Author. (7) Saint Ambroses testimony of our Martyr. (8) The time and Canon of P. Gelasius. (9) The story of St. Georges only reckoned as apocryphall. (10) The meaning of Gelasius not to exclude the Martyr with his History. (11) The Arias George not likely in so small a tract of time to be reputed as a Martyr. (12) A catalogue of the Authors cited in this booke, which have made honorable mention of Saint George; as also of those Princes, Popes, and Prelates which have done him honour: digested in their times and ages.

(I)

Two things these are, which are to be dispatched, before wee come to the producing of further evidence on our party: viz. A doubt to be removed, and the designment of the place or scene of this great Action. Of these the doubt to be removed, is that particular passage touching Magnentius, said there to be a principall Favorite of Diocletian, and at that time Consull: and this may well be called a doubt, because in all the Consular tables, which I have searched and scene; I cannot meeete, during the whole Empire of Diocletian, a Consull of that name. But if wee can finde out the man; I hope we shall agree with ease enough, about his being Consull: and for the finding out the man, we must make two enquires. My first enquire is, whether

Mag-

Magnentius there mentioned, might not be he, which afterwards slew Constans, sonne unto Constantine the Great, and tooke unto himselfe that part of the Roman Empire, which Constans then commanded. To make this probable, (for we aspire no further) we must first understand, that Diocletian when he associated Maximinian in the Empire, did take unto himselfe a name from Jupiter, the other his, from Hercules: the one, being thenceforth called Diocletianus Iovius, the other Maximinianus Herculinus. But not content with this, to make their memory in these adjuncts, more eternall, they raised two severall Companies of selected Souldiers, whom they called Iovii & Herculi. Of these selected Companies, Magnentius was at that time Captain or Commander, (Comes Herculiorem & Ioviorum, hee is called in the ancient story) when he made slaughter of Prince Constans: and therefore not unlikely, but he may be the Favourite of Diocletian, mentioned in Metaphrastes; and by him raised unto this honour. If any thing may bee objected against this, it is, that if Magnentius were at that time Consul, when S. George was made a Martyr, either he had beene dead, before the murder of the young Emperour Constans; or else too old, to undertake such enterprises. Of his deccase before that time, I thinke there can be nothing proved; unless by way of possible conjecture. And for his age, allowing him for twenty, Anno 290. when our Martyr suffered; about which age, and sooner, many had beene advanced upon speciall favour, to that dignity; it will then easily appeare, that he could be no lesse than 80. yeeres of age, at his usurping of the Empire. This I confesse for true, but yet I must affirme withall, that age is hardly able to keep under, either ambitious desires, or noble resolutions. For Beetannion, who at the same time with this Magnentius, assumed the purple habite in the Countries of Pannonia, was exceeding ancient, etate grandum, as Orosius calls him. And in the latter dayes, Veneri, Admirall of the Venetian Fleet, in the great Battaille of Lepanto, was close upon fourescore: yet of that haughty spirit, that he contested with Don John the Spanish Admirall, even to a Challenge for the Field; who then was in the prime prime and gallantie of his youth. A greater age than this, was that of Andreas Auria, Admirall to Charles the fifth, who lived till 94. no lesse: and held unto the last, a man of notable undertakings, and offbrave performance. And if we looke on former times, we finde that most of Alexanders great Commanders, attain'd unto the age of 80. yeers, or not much short of it: and yet, contended with each other, even till their latest gaspe of breath, for the sole Empire, and chiefe Sovereignty of Greece and Asia. So stirring is the fire of glory and ambition, that it will kinde and enflame the coldest appetite of age. Our next enquisite is, whether the name be not mistaken in the Author, or the transcribers, for Maxentius. Which if it may bee granted, as the mistake is very easie: then will it bee a matter of farre lesse difficultie than before. For who so little conversant in the Histories of those times, but may remember, that Maximianus Herculus had a sonne so named: and that upon the death of Constantius Chlorus, he was proclaim'd Augustus, and saluted Emperour by the Prætorian bands at Rome. An honour he enjoyed not long, being first undermined by his owne Father, the old tyrant, and after slain, with the discomfiture of his whole forces, at the Milvian bridge neere Rome, by Constantine the Great. Now if it may bee granted, that the name may possibly bee mistaken, as wee see daily worse mistakes in the editions of the best Authors: how easie is it to beleve, that this Maxentius, the sonne of the one Emperour, might be made Consul, and in especiall favour with the other? But then it is objected, that we meet not with his name in any of the Consular-Tables. This we affirme, and yet withall that notwithstanding this, Maxentius might be Consul. For besides the Consuls Ordinarie, appointed for the yeere, whose names onely occurre in the publike Tables: there was another sort of Consuls, call'd Consuls honourarie, or Minores, appointed onely for a Moneth, and sometimes longer, as it pleas'd the Emperours: Of this see Dion. A custome taken up, upon the end of the Civill warres, Cum belli civilis premia festinari caperunt, as it is in Tacitus; when now the Emperours had many men to gratifie, gratifie, and could not speed them all in ordinarie course. Of the which kinde of Consuls, Maxentius might bee one; To also might Magnentius, though we finde nothing of them in the common Calendars. Of this kinde also, might there be some other Consull of the latter name: although no further mention of him in the Histories of that age and time. Adde hereunto that probably it was the ignorance of the translator, to call Magnentius by the name of Consul: which in the middle times, was used to signifie, not a Romane Magistrate, as in the ancient Latine Writers; but some great Officer or Commander in the Common-wealth. As Robert, Earle of Gloucester, called commonly in the Monkish Writers of this state, Consul Gloucestris: and so divers others. And this I doe the rather thinke, because in some records of the Church of Greece, of which hereafter, hee is not stiled Consul or Consul, but onely Counsellor or assessor: which sence, the Latine Consul, according to the language of those times, will easily beare.

(2) As for the Theater or Stage, whereon this great and famous tragedie was acted: it hath beene said to be in Lydda, a towne in Palestine, in the tribe of Ephraim. Knowne in the Writers both of ancient and middle times, by the name Diospolis, or the towne of Jupiter, because that idoll-god was there worshipped: and in the Church storie by the Councell held against Pelagius, wherein, colludingly, hee abjured his heresie. That in this towne Saint George received the crowne of Martyrdome, is affirmed severally, by Vincentius, Antoninus, and some other of the Latine Writers, who tooke it on Vincentius credit. But herein, as hee was himselfe deceived, so he deceived those also that trusted to him. The reason of this error we shall see anone, when we examine this particular more exactly. It is true indeed, his body was there reverently intombed, which might occasion the mistake, as not improbable it did: his Sepulchre being there extant to be showne, even in the dayes of Willm of Tyre, who lived about the yeere 1180. For so hee testifieth himselfe, In hac urbe (Lydda) usque hodie egregij martiris Georgij Sepulchrum ostenditur, in quo secundum exteriorem

Hist. bell sacr.
l. 7. cap. 22.

hominem

L

Hist Hierosol.
cap. 57.

Descript. terre sancte.

In Rich. primo.

hominem in Deo creditur conquisce. By meanes whereof, and other honours done in that Citie, to the memory of our blessed Martyr: the Christians hereabouts abandoning the name of Lydda, have called it generally Saint Georges: so witnesseth Iacobus de Vitriaco, who writ about the yeere, 1240. and was a Bishop of this countrie, that Lydda civitas, quondam Diopolis appellata, nunc ad S. Georgium nuncupatur. Both circumstances, that of his buriall, and this other mentioned last, together in old Fryer Anselme, quarto miliario à Modin est Lydda, civitas, qua Diopolis dicitur, in qua corpus B. Georgij testantur fuisse; & S. Georgium vulgo dicitur. Shall we have more? Roger de Hoveden in his Annals, reciting there the names of such great personages, as in the Christian campe dyed at the siege of Ptolemais, gives us amongst the rest, three Bishops, viz. novus Episcopus de Acon, Episcopus de Baruch, Episcopus de S. Georgio; for at that time, the Christians had made that towne a Bishops See, as we shall see hereafter.

(3) But Lydda or Diopolis, most certaine, cannot be the Stage or Theater, on which he suffered. My reason is, because it is related in Metaphrastes, that Saint George not long before his death, desired a servant of his owne to be permitted to come to him; which granted, and the servant come, he earnestly enjoyned him, that after his decease, he should take his body, and carry it to Palestine, where before they dwelt, and there dispose of it according as before his comming thence he had appointed. Postquam ex hac vita migravero, (saith he) accepto hoc corpore meo, quemadmodum ante discessum meum statui, domum quam habitare soliti sumus, prope Palestinam contendere &c. as that Author hath it. His servant promised to performe his last request, and so hee did. This told us by the Greeke Menologie for November, that his dead body according unto his command, was by his servant carried into Palestine, and there, with other christians, decently interred. Ο μὲν δευτέρων ἐμὴν (saith the Menologie) τὸ κομὸν τιμὸν ἐκεῖνο σῶμα τὸ ἀγίον ἀναλαβόμεν, ὡς τῇ αὐτῇ διατίττεις Παλαιστίνῃ ἀπαίρει ἐν δαὶ τὸ ὑπὸ τὴν ἐκείνου σῶν ὡς ἀλλοις χριστιανοῖς ἐν λαβῶς κεινῶς. This is sufficient

proofe

proofe that our blessed Martyr suffered not in Diopolis, or Lydda: for then what neede he charge his servant to convey his corps to Palestine, if he had died in Lydda, a towne of Palestine? That he was buried here, wee have shewne already, and shall shew more hereof hereafter: if any aske what place I then appoint for his execution: I answer Nicomedia, a great Citie ~~by~~ Bythinia; and at that time, imperatoria sedes facta, the regall Citie of the East: for here it was that Diocletian kept his Court, when he began to persecute the Church of God: here the imperiall edict, which authorized it, was enacted; and here was first according to that savage edict, put in execution. This evident, out of the historie of Eusebius, and others, writing of those times. Nor is it to be thought, that Lydda, a poore towne of Palestine, was either honoured with the seate and presence of so great an Emperour, or capable of him, the Senate and their whole retinue: which put together, and compared unto the storie where George is said in the beginning of the troubles, and as the edict was resolved on, to come before the Emperour in open Senate, and openly declame against it: will make it plaine and manifest, that hee suffered not in Lydda, but in Nicomedia.

(4) If it be so, as sure it is, what answer shall wee make unto Vincentius Belvacensis, and others which have writ since him, who tell us that he suffered in Diopolis, a towne of Persia, as they call it. In briebe, we answer, that sure Vincentius was mistaken in the meaning of those Martyrologies, which he had consulted. In Metaphrastes, and Paschasius, and the Greeke Liturgies, there is no mention of the place at all: they taking it for granted, that there he suffered, where then the Emperour kept his Court. Our venerable Bede is silent also in this point, nor doth he say particularly, that his memoriall was more duely solemaized in one place, then another. But Vuardus first, and after him, Norgerius, (of both which hereafter) tell us his passion was commemorated at Diopolis, a towne of Persia. In Perside, (see more of this in our next Chapter) civitate Diopoli, passio S. Georgii Martyris, &c. as those Authors have it. This was the phrase in which Vincentius was mistaken. For Passio amongst writers of that nature, is not used to signifie the passion or act of suffering; as easily Vincentius might mistake it. It signifies sometimes the historie it selfe, the whole narration, wherein such sufferings are expressed: as in Gelasius Canon, and in our particular, Passio Georgij Apocrypha, the historie (then extant) of Saint Georges suffering, is pronounced Apocryphall. I say the historie, and not the passion or act it selfe, as out of ignorance hath beene by some objected. It also signifies the celebration of their acts and sufferings, in such particular Cities, where most commonly it was performed: which is the meaning of the word in the Martyrologies, as may bee plainly shewne to those who shall looke upon them, by almost infinite examples. So that when Vsuardus and others in their Martyrologies report it thus; In Perside, civitate Diopsoli, passio S. Georgij Martyris: it is not to be understood that there he suffered: Rather that there the memorie of his passion was solemnized, where he was buried, and his name honoured with a Temple: as it was also with many other of the Martyrs. This, as it seemes, Vincentius understood not rightly, but finding in the Martyrologic of Vsuardus, which was then generally received, and as Molanus thinks, scarce any other used in the Church of Rome: finding therein, I say, Diopsolis noted for the place, and passio Georgij for the thing, he mistooke passio there, to signifie the passion or the act it selfe, which must be onely understood of the celebration; nor will the Grammar of it beare any other sence. Others which were misled by him, and by his authoritie, are answered in him.

(5). These matters thus dispatched, wee now proceed to verifie the former Storie, out of the words of such as haue concurr'd with Metaphrastes, in the maine and substance. And first we will attempt to iustifie the whole narration out of Eusebius, whose countenance herein, will I am sure bee worth our seeking. And I would gladly know, what part or circumstance there is in all our History; for the defence whereof, we may not use his testimony. Is it, that any Cappadocian was adjudg'd to suffer for the Gospell? He tels us there, that one Seleucus, Julian, and others of that Country, receiv'd the Crowne of Martyrdome, during the persecution rais'd by Diocletian. Or is it that the Persecution rais'd in Nicomedia? He hath some Chapters of such men as suffered in that Citie. It is not, I am sure, that any of the militarie men abandoned their advancements, or yeelded up their lives, to testifie how little they esteemed them, in comparison of Christ. For this he hath expressly, that many of them, when the Persecution first began, did willingly forsake their honourable Offices, and some their lives: Hist Eccles. l. 8. c. 4. 7.

εἰς τὴν δούλοῦ τοῦ ἐμὸν ὁ αἰτίας ἡ ἀποβαλὼν· ἀλλὰ καὶ διατάσσοντες ἐν αἰσέσει ἀντιπαθημάτων. Nor can it be, that the Imperial edict did not extend to such as were of his retinue, and did belong immediately unto his person. For in the same booke, he mentions Dorotheus and Gorganius, ἐπεὶ αἱμα πλείοσι τῇ βασιλικῇ διοικήσει, with many more of Casars household. We grant indeed, that no such name as that of George, occurs in all that Author: but we affirme withall, that he confesseth it an infinite and tedious businesse, to recount the names of all that suffered, or capitulate those severall torments they endured; and therefore purposely omits them. L. 8. c. 24. c. τίμα χρὴ γὰρ ἐπ' ὀνόματι τοῦ ἡσυχαστῆος μνημονεύειν, ἢ τῶν πολλῶν τοῦ αὐτοῦ ἀριθμῶν, &c. as he there hath it. So then, Eusebius doth affirme that Cappadocia had its Martyrs, that the Persecution raged in Nicomedia, that it extended to the military men, and to those also that attended in the Pallace; and lastly, that it is impossible to tell the names of all that suffered. Put this together, and it will amount to this; that George, one of those many Martyrs whom Eusebius doth not name, a Cappadocian by his country, a Souldier by profession, and one that waited in the Court; was put to death in Nicomedia, by torments not to be expressed, because hee constantly continued in the Faith of Christ.

(6) But not to deale in generalls onely; what now if I should say, that I have found out our S. George particularly amongst the Martyrs mentioned in Eusebius. Not named expressly, I confesse, by the name of George: but so markt out, and charactred, described unto us by such lively

Euf. hist. l. 8. c. 5.

and particular notes ; that wee may probably conjecture, that it is the same. I meane that Martyr, who, as Eusebius tells us, suffered at Nicomedia, in the beginning and first instance of this persecution : the history whereof is thus laid before us by that Author. Αὐτίκα γάρ, τὸ ἐκ ἀσχυρῶν πεισθὰς

ἡ ἀγὰς καὶ τὴν ἐν τῷ βίῳ νενομισμένην ἱεροφάνειαν ἐπέδεικτον, &c.

„ No sooner was the Edict made against the Church, proposed in Nicomedia, but presently one of no common „ rank, but very high advanced in fortunes, and in worldly honours, moved with a zeale to God, and a lively „ faith, tare it in peeces where it hanged in the open view, „ as prophane and impious. And this he did, two of the „ Emperors being then present in the City, viz. Diocletian, „ which was the first, and Galerius Maximianus being
 „ the fourth in ranke amongst them. Αὐτὸν δὲ τὸν πρῶτον

„ αὐτοῦ, &c. This was the first (saith he) who was en„ nobled for his sufferings at that time ; on whom, no „ doubt, there was inflicted what ever punishment might „ be thought answerable to the fact, which hee endured „ with a most quiet and untroubled minde, and so conti„ nued till the last. Suppose wee should affirme this Mar„ tyr to be our S. George, what injury should we either doe un„ to the story, or the truth ? certainly none. For so exactly „ doth each severall circumstance agree unto him, that tell „ me, if they can bee possibly applied to any other : Et ubi „ constat de persona, nil refert de nomine, as the Lawyers have
 „ it. For the description of his person, S. George was an ἀσχυρῶν, „ a man of no obscure or ignoble ranke, but highly „ raised both in his honours and estate. Nicophon describes „ this Nicomedian Martyr to bee ἄριστος ἀσχυρῶν or καρχήμιος „ ἐπὶ τοῖς βασιλείοις, one that had borne the principall offices of „ state ; and so Basilius saith of George, ὡς νενομισμένην „ μεσάζει, as before was noted. Then for the circumstances „ both of time and place, S. George in Nicomedia, when the „ imperiall Edict was to bee verified in the Senate, attempted „ that which by Eusebius is reported. Next for the substance „ of the act, it was a publique opposition to that cruell and „ prophane decree, which by the Emperor and all his Coun-„ cell

Lib. 7. 5.

cell was resolved on : and that not done in private, but in the open Senate, and in the presence of those very Emperours, which (as Eusebius saith) were then both present in the city. Last of all, let us looke upon the consequence, and we shall finde S. George ennobled by his sufferings, no Martyr more : and that hee bare them all with an undaunted spirit, an invincible resolution. Adde hereunto, that Constantine the great hath told us, how in the entrance of Dionysius in the state, the Oracle of Apollo made complaint, that he no longer could presage of things to come : ὡς ἄρα οὐδὲ τῶν θεῶν ἐμπίστος ἔσται, &c. the generation of the just being the hinderance that he could not. The Emperour thereupon demanding, who were those just and righteous men whom the Devil meant: one of the Soothsayers answered, that they were the Christians. Whereat being startled, and apprehending an occasion so suteable unto his nature, hee made that Edict to be exhibited to the people, and proposed in Senate, which gave occasion to the act of that noble Martyr whom Eusebius mentioneth. Consult with Metaphrastes, and you shall finde this very passage, verbatim, as it is related by Eusebius, to be the introduction to S. Georges story ; and to his notable undertaking in opposition to the cruell Edict of the Emperours. Briefely compare the storie both of them together, this in Eusebius, and that in Simeon & Metaphrastes; and say, who can, if there bee any difference in the maine and substance ; or indeed any, save that Metaphrastes hath delivered that at large, and with many circumstances ; which by the other is related shortly, and in a word. Which circumstances and particulars, Metaphrastes well might haue, and no doubt hee had, out of the publique monuments and records of the Easterne Churches ; whereas Eusebius writing a generall history, could not so punctually and exactly expresse particulars : though I perswade my selfe, that had we that ἡλικία καὶ ἀντιόχου which he often mentions, and to the which hee doth sometimes referre his readers ; we there should finde S. George particularly exprest by name, as well as any of the others. It's true indeed, Eusebius in his history makes not the persecu-

*Euseb. de vita
Const. l. 2. c. 48.*

False

V: supra.

tion to begin, till the nineteenth yeere of Diocletian, which cannot well agree with the yeere and time, wherein S. George is said to suffer. But thereunto we answer first, that the differences which occurre est-soone amongst Chronologers, are most an end no prejudice to the truth of story: and secondly, that possibly this may be an Achronisme in Eusebius, who hath delivered us the historie of that persecution somewhat perplexedly and confusedly. This I am sure of, that himselfe elswhere, makes the persecution to beginne almost with Diocletian; and tels us that the Emperour had that conference with the Sooth-sayers, the famous Constantine, κοινὸν τοῖς Σοφισταῖς, being as then a very boy. Now Constantine lived till the age of 65. as we reade in Socrates; of which himselfe raigned 31. and his father foure, or thereabouts. By which account hee was no lesse then 29. in the nineteenth yeere of Diocletian; and surely would not call himselfe a very boy, (from his mouth Eusebius speakes it) at so great an age. Supposing therefore that this persecution was begun about the fift or sixt yeere of the Emperour Diocletian, when Constantine was about the age of sixteene yeeres: we shall concurre exactly with the time, allotted to the suffering of our blessed Martyr; and so that doubt is easily answered. These arguments I presume, my readers will account as probable: for my part, I am verily perswaded, that they are demonstrative. But as for his Martyrologic, or ἑορταγιὰν ὑπομνήματα as himselfe calls it, made by him at the command of Constantine; it is not to be doubted, as I said before, but that therein hee hath delivered us the storie of Saint George by name. Out of which treasure of his, many Saints both men and women, especially of the Easterne parts, (and why not then our blessed Martyr amongst the rest?) which are not mentioned, one hardly of an hundred in his historie now extant, were taken questionlesse into the Martyrologies of succeeding ages, & transmitted unto us: the memory of whom might otherwise have beene lost for ever. And this the rather I beleeve in the particular of Saint George, because Nicephorus having in the 15. Chapter of his seventh Booke, in brieft related the martyrdome of Saint.

Saint George, and of Procopius, (both which Cedrenus also joynes together in their sufferings, as we shall see hereafter:) doth in the close thereof, referre us to Eusebius Martyrologie, as if it were for more assurance, or further information.

(7) In the next place we have the testimony of Saint Ambrose; his words are these. Georgius Christi miles fidelissimus, cum Christianismi professio tegetur solus inter Christianos intrepidus Dei filium confessus est: Cui tantam constantiam gratia divina concessit, ut & tyrannica potestatis precepta contemneret, & innumerabilium non formidaret tormenta poenarum.

„ Id est. George the most faithfull Soldier of Iesus Christ,
 „ when as Religion was else every where dissembled, alone, „ adventured to confesse the name of God: to whom it „ pleased the Lord to give so much of Heavenly grace, that „ he not onely scorned the tyrants, but contemned their „ torments. This I find cyted by Hermannus Shedel, in his Chronica Chronicorum; and out of him by Bergomensis, since by Molanus, in his Annotations upon Usuard's Martyrology: Iacobus de Voragine relyeth also, in the same passage, on the authority of Ambrose, so doth Vincentius, and Antoninus Florentinus. The treatise out of which his testimony is avouched, is by them called Liber prefationum; not now extant. Vicelinus, who doth also build on the authority of this Reverent Father, saith that the booke is long since perished: so perished, as it seemes, that there is nothing left of it, but the name, and some scattered remnants. It is true that Passerin, who takes upon him to Marshall all the workes of that excellent man, makes no mention of it. But yet Trithemius, a man of no lesse diligence, and more fidelity; ascribes it to him; and so doth Gesner also in his Bibliotheca. So doth Erasmus also, who in his censure of the writings of S. Ambrose, deplores the losse thereof: Librum prefationum & hymnorum intercidisse doleo, as he there hath it. Which is enough to intimate unto his Reader, that he conceived that treatise to have beene written by that Father: A piece, it seemes much used in businesse of this present nature, and cited often by those Authors which have delivered to us the Lives and sufferings of the Saints: as may be plainly scene by

by any which will take the paines to search into them. All I will adde is this, that if it were not Ambrose, which I will not say: yet questionlesse the Author of it is of good antiquity; and the worke also thought to be of good authority; which is sufficient of it selfe, to give both countenance and assurance to S. Georges cause.

(8) But of our next witnesse, there is lesse doubt, and a larger testimonie; though in his words we meet with somewhat which requires a Commentarie. A witnesse which hath beene examined on the adverse part already, where he was able to say nothing: I meane Gelasius, Pope of Rome, and his so memorated Canon. This Pope began his Papacie, Anno 492. and dyed in 96. some foure yeeres after. About his time, and long before it, the Heretickes had busily employed themselves, to falsifie the publike Acts and writings of the Church, as also to corrupt the histories of the Saints and Martyrs: that so thereby they neither might disgrace the true Saints; or otherwise in their names, preserve the memory of such principall men amongst themselves, which they deerely honoured, which thing they had effected so according to their wish, that now it was high time to have a carefull eye upon them, or else it may be, they might have growne too potent, to be easily suppressed. For this cause, Pope Gelasius having assembled 72. of his neighbour Prelates unto Rome, did then and there, with their advice, and by their diligent assistance, contrive a Catalogue of all such dangerous writings as were thought fit to be rejected: giuing to those which they accounted true and orthodoxe, the place and honour due unto them. Which Canon, since it is alledged against us, thereby to overthrow the History of our Saint George, we will in this place bring into the open view, as much of it as concernes the businesse now in hand: that so wee may encounter them with their owne weapons. The Canon is as followeth. Gesta S. Martyrum qui multiplicibus tormentorum cruciatibus, & mirabilibus confessionum triumphis, irradiant; qui ita esse Catholicorum dubitet, & maiora eos in agonibus esse perpeffos, nec suis viribus, sed dei gratia & adiutorio uniuersa tolerasse? Sed ideo secundum consue- consuetudinem antiquam, singulari cautela in Sancta Rom. Ecclesia non leguntur, quia eorum, qui scribere, nomina penitus ignorantur, & ab infidelibus idiotis superflue vel minus apte, quam rei ordo fuerit, scripta esse putantur: Sicut cuiusdam Quiriaci, et Iulite matris ejus, sicut Georgij, aliorumque passiones hujusmodi, que ab hæreticis perhibentur conscriptæ, propter quod (ut dictum est) ne vel levius subsannandi occasio oriretur, in S. Romana Ecclesia non leguntur. Nos tamen cum prædicta Ecclesia, omnes Martyres atque eorum gloriosos agones, qui Deo magis quam hominibus noti sunt, cum omni devotione veneramus. So farre the very words, and letter of the Canon.

(9) By this it doth appeare, that as the Saints in general, so also particularly S. George had beene abused and counterfeited in his Story: truths being mixed with falshood, and matters undeniable with things suspected: there being hardly one of that sacred order, whose acts and sufferings have come so cleerely to our hands, but that there is a medley in them of strange, and many times incongruous narrations. On which sufficient grounds, the historie of Saint George then extant is in the close of the same Canon, reckoned as Apocryphall; as were a great many others of the same temper. But the particular reason why it was so reckoned in that Canon, is by our later Writers, diversly related, as their conjectures pleased to leade them: Raphael Volaterranus makes it to be rejected, onely so much of it, as concernes Saint Georges combat with the Dragon: which also is assigned by Antoninus, amongst other causes, but by neither rightly. For in those times, and many hundred yeeres behind them, the fable of the Dragon was not so much as thought of in the Church Christian. Jacobus de Voragine more neerely to the truth, Ex eo quod Martyrium ejus certam relationem non habet: because the storie of his death is told us in most perplex and uncertaine manner. In Calendaris n. Bræ, &c. For in the Calendar of Bræ, we finde (saith hee) that he was martyred in Diospolis, a Towne of Paria, in others, that he lyeth buried in Diospolis, not faire from Ioppo: In some, that he did suffer under Dionetian and Maximinian, Emperours; in others, under Diocletian, King of the

Hist. Lamb. in S. Georgio.

Per-

Persians, no lesse then 70. tributarie Kings being in presence. Somewhat, I say, of this, was rightly aym'd at by this blinde Archer: but Bede is brought in by him somewhat too early, as being a Post-natus, scarce borne within two centuries of yeeres succeeding. But what need more conjectures, or what use is there indeed of any, since the same Canon which hath decreed the History of George (then extant) to be Apocryphall; hath also told us, that it was then generally beleev'd, to have beene writ by Hereticks. This is enough to make the History of any St. suspected and Apocryphall. We need seeke no further. Out of which storie, thus exploded by Gelasius, they which in latter times composed the history of our Martyr, borrowed most likely their narrations of Athanasius the Magitian, and of the Lady Alexandra: not to say any thing of that terrible massacre, which by a cheating trick he made of many of the people; branded by Antoninus, as before we noted.

(10) Hitherto have we spoken of Gelasius Canon, and nothing all this while, which may redound from thence to Saint Georges credit. Nothing indeed in that which hath beene spoken hitherto, because we were to lay our ground, before we rais'd our building. But that now done, and the full meaning of the Canon duely pondered: it will appeare for certaine, that though Gelasius taxed the storie of Saint George as dangerous and Apocryphall; yet he hath done the Saint himselfe all due respects, and confirm'd him to us. This I did note before out of the words of Bellarmino, in a reply to Doctor Boys, who needs would have both Bellarmino, and Pope Gelasius, speake for him; in making our S. George to be a meere Chimæra, or thing of nothing, which God knowes they never meant. This I say, we did note before from Bellarmino; but now we note it out of Gelasius himselfe, and the very letter of his Canon. For having told us, that the actions of many of the Saints, were writ by Infidels, or rather Mis-beleevvers; and in particular, that the passion of Saint George was compos'd by Heretickes, hee states it thus: that notwithstanding this, hee, and the Church with him, did reverence all those sacred Martyrs, and

V. chap. 3. sect. 8.

and their glorious sufferings for the Truth, knowne better unto God, than any of his people. Nos tamen cum predicta Ecclesia, omnes Martyres, atque eorum gloriosos agones, qui Deo magis quam hominibus noti sunt, cum omni devotione veneramur: So saith Gelasius. It also seemes by that which is remaining of the Canons of Nicephorus the Confessour, that there were two severall Martyrologies or Histories of Saint George then extant, and both condemned, which is authoritie sufficient, that the storie onely is discarded, and not the Martyr. Apoclypsin Esdra, & Zosmie, & duo S. Georgii Martyria, et sanctorum Martyrum Cerici, (so he calls him) et Iulitta &c. suscipere non oportet. But to returne againe unto Gelasius and his Canon, that wee doe construe him aright, and doe not mis-report his meaning, is easie to be seene, by the concurrent suffrages of Beda, Antoninus, Hermannus Schedell, Bergomensis, Notgerus, and Vsuardus; all which, as we shall see in the next Chapter, doe so conceive it. But wee might well haue sav'd this labour. For Doctor Reynolds also cannot but acknowledge, that without further question, Gelasius did beleewe Saint George to be an holy Martyr, although he found the storie had beene writ by Heretickes: Gelasius etiam, tametsi fraudem hanc offaceret, ipsum putabat nihilominus sanctum fuisse Martyrem. If so, then I perswade my selfe it were much safer to give credit to Gelasius, who liv'd so neere the time of Saint Georges suffering: than any Doctor, of what eminent ranke soever, above a thousand yeers below him. We may besides conceive, what was Gelasius meaning in this Canon, in that hee, censureth the History of Quiriacus and Iulitta also, as he doth that of George: pronouncing both of them to be writ by heretickes: yet notwithstanding they were both honoured in the Church as holy Martyrs, and the memoriall of their sufferings celebrated in the Churches of the West, the sixteenth of June, (so have the Romane Martyrologie, and those of Beda and Vsuardus,) the Greek Church celebrating their comemorations, the fifteenth of July. If so, if that the historie of Iulitta was pronounced to be Apocryphall, and notwithstanding, she her selfe confessed to be a holy Martyr: the like may be affirmed

Dr. Reynolds
Idol. Rom l. 2.
c. 5. sect. 21.

affirmed for us, of our Saint George, that questionlesse hee was a true and glorious Martyr, however that the Historie then extant, was adjudged Apocryphall, and writ by heretickes. To bring the matter neerer home, Gelasius in that Canon hath reckoned as Apocryphall, the Itinerarie of Saint Peter, the Acts of Paul, and Thecla, the Recantation of Adam, Origen, and Cyprian, and many others. What then shall therefore wee conclude, that Peter never travailed, or that there never was a woman of the name of Thecla, or that Saint Cyprian, or Origen, or Adam, never recanted their impieties and errours? Nay, we conclude from hence, that questionlesse Saint George is to be reckoned as a Martyr, because the storie onely is condemned, and not the Saint; iust as we may resolve, that there was such a noble Prince as Arthur, because the Monke of Malmesburie hath told us, how much his famous deeds were over-acted by his Country men the Brittaines. For sure the inference would be simple, should any hence conclude, that doubtlesse there was no such Prince, or that the actions which are commonly imputed to him, are all false and fabulous, because the historie, in which amongst many other things, they are contain'd, was by the Councell held at Trent, prohibited and adjudged Apocryphall, under the name of Arturus Britannus. Not that the Councell by Arturus, meant the King himselfe, (which is Georges case) but that same Historie onely, writ by Monmouth, surnamed Arturus.

(11) For certainly, had there beene any meaning in Gelasius to have exploded the Martyr, together with his History; he might as easily have done it, as have spoke the word. He might, I say, have done it with as much ease, as have spoke the word, by adding onely this of Doctor Reynolds to the Canon; Fuit enim hic Georgius homo improbus, hereticus Ariannus. This had for ever been enough to have made his memory as odious, as his story was suspected; and to have razed his name, not onely out of the publique Calendar, but out of the good opinion of all honest men. Gelasius could not possibly be ignorant, what to determine of the Arian George of Alexandria; had he conceived it to be him;

ut. quo sup.

him; unlesse he had been ignorant of the writings of the ancient fathers; wherein his cruelties and butcherly behaviour are so lively represented. And had he thought it to be him, we may assure our selves that not for feare nor fauour, he had so gently spared his person; and stumbled onely at the story: or that to please the Gothes who then swayed in Italy, and favoured not a little of the Arian heresie, he would permit so damnable and vile a Tyrant to passe for currant as a Saint. Gelasius was too faithfull in the discharge of his great office, to be so misconstrued. Nor is it to be thought, suppose Gelasius were unfaithfull, that George the Arian Heretick could be so cunningly inserted into the Calendar, and passe so currantly among the Saints; so soone upon his most deserved, though cruell execution, the Church especially keeping an eye so watchfull over them and their delignes, that all their practises were as soon brought to light almost, as they were conceived. For from the death of George, unto the Popedom of Gelasius, are but 130. yeeres, or thereabouts; too scant a time to have his Villanies forgotten, and himself reputed for a Martyr. It is true, that many of the Gothes having received the faith of Christ, though spotted and defiled with the Arian tenets, which they received together with it, were by Attila, a Gothish King, but of another faction, done to death, and so accounted by the Church amongst the Martyrs. But Socrates, who tells the storie, tells us also this, that they poore soules, suffered not for their misdemeanours, nor were they Arians out of choice, but out of ignorance: and that ἐν τῇ ἀνομίᾳ, even in Lib 4. 28 Lat. the singleness of their hearts, ἐν ᾧ ἡ ψυχὴ ἡμῶν ἵστανται, and 28. onely in defence of their faith in Christ; they yielded up their lives to preserve their piety. This was not George's case, a damnable and bloudie tyrant; one stubbornly resolved to advance an heresie, which he had impiously undertaken: and for that branded in the Fathers, and signatized amongst the writers of Ecclesiastical historie, yea even by Socrates himselfe, who tells the storie of the other. Likely indeed it is, that if the Arians had prevailed, they would have given their George a principall habitation in the Minut. Felix.

the Heaven of glories; above Eusebius of Nicomedia, or Marius, or Endoxius, or Theognis; or perhaps, next unto their founder Arian himselfe. But that the Christian Church should in so short and small a space, ranke him among the Saints; this I can hardly be perswaded, unlesse perchance we may beleve that in the same times she could condemne the Heretic, and adore the Heretickes. I know it was a frequent custome with the antient Romans, to honour and adore the gods of those many nations, which themselves had vanquished; Religionibus servare victis. Captivos eos post victorias adorare, as Octavius in the Dialogue. But this they did not on mistake, or any couzenage put upon them by the vanquish'd Nations. No, it was onely on a superstitious conceit, that having in their Citie all the Gods whose people they subdued, and placing them in their most rich and sumptuous Temples, they might by their assistance, the better bring the residue of the world under their subjection. Sic dum universarum gentium sacra suscipiunt, etiam regnare meminerunt: So saith Cecilius in the same Author, Not to say more, I thinke it as impossible altogether, that in so small a tract of time, if at all ever, the Arian George should be reputed for a Saint amongst the Orthodox Professors, now victorious: as that our reverend Prelates, Cranmer, Latimer, and Ridley, should in an equall space of time, bee taken into the Roman Martyrologies; or that their Henry Garnet, James Clement, or Nicholas Sanders, by them honoured, should be accounted Martyrs in the Churches Prestant; in case that either side prevaile, and suppress the other.

De Idol. Rom.
l. i. c. 5. §. 16. 22.

(12) To bring this Chapter to an end, it is the last of Doctor Reynolds two Conclusions, Nullum Georgij Cappadocis et Martyris, nisi Arian, mentionem ab ullo idonso autore fieri; that never any George of Cappadocia was reputed as a Martyr, in any Author worthy credit, but George the Arian. In generall answer to which generall challenge, I have thought good, before we further labour in particular proofes, to draw together in a Table, the names of all such Authors cited in this worke, by all of which S. George is reckoned as a Martyr, by many of them said to be of Cappadocia. All of them I perswade my selfe worthy of credit, and the ornament of the age in which they lived. Yet lest their affirmavit should be question'd and controul'd by our choycer judgements, I have tooke care to mingle with them, such famous Princes and Prelates celebrated for their goodnesse, as have done him publike honours: all which I have digested according to their, severall times and ages, in the forme that followeth:

The Catalogue.

- 326 Eusebius Cæsariensis.
 374 Saint Ambrose.
 492 Gelasius Pope of Rome.
 515 Childebertus R. Francorum. 225.
 527 Iustinianus Imp.
 Procopius Cæsariensis p. 231.
 Sidonius Archbishop of Mentzi 232. 234. 239.
 570 Venantius Fortunatus. 232.
 596 Gregorius Turonensis. p. 223. 227.
 600 Greg. I. Pont. Rom. 233.
 640 Faß Siculi. p. 186. 200. 201.
 660 Hildericus R. Austrasia.
 690 Adamannus scotus.
 698 Cunibertus R. Lombard.
 730 Beda Venerabilis. p. 201. 207.
 752 Zacharias Pont. Rom. p. 234.
 774 Paulus Diaconus.
 780 Albinus Alcuinus. 211.
 812 Vuardus Monachus. p. 174. 201. 207.
 M 835 Raba

- 835 Rabanus Maurus. p. 174
 837 Aimoinus Monachus. p. 225.
 850 Simoon Metaphrastes. p. 124. = 129. 130. 131. 133. 137.
 858 Anastasius Bibliothec. p. 237.
 912 Notgerus Monachus. p. 174. 175. 201. 207
 970 Iohn Zemizces Emp. of Constant.
 975 Tribunus Mevius, D. Venetorum.
Martyrologium Saxonicum.
 993 Africus Archiep. Cantuariens.
 996 Hedings, Ducissa Bavaria.
 1005 Henn. 2. Imp. Germ.
 1053 Ioh. Euchaites, Ep. Orient. p. 186. 190
Constant. Monomach. Emp. of Const.
 1070 Geo. Cedrenus. p. 187. 199. 200
 1074 Rob. D. Oyley nob. Anglus.
 1098 Godfrey of Bevilon. p. 187. 231
 1120 Robertus Monachus. p. 126. 249. 251. 252
Anna Comnena. p. 127. 190. 231.
Calicles, agr. Poet. p. 130
 1130 Gulielm. Malmisburiens. p. 171. 231. 252 1141 Gualt. Ep. Augusta Vindelicorum.
 1180 Gulielm. Tyrinus. p. 171. 230. 251.
 1250 Vincentius Belvacensis. p. 140. 175. 176. 200. 200. 201.
 1260 Philos, agr. Poet. p. 191. 200. 200. 201
 1273 Radulphus Imp. Germ.
 1282 Iacobus de Veragine. p. 176. 200. 200. 201. 250
 1305 Nicephorus Calistus. p. 167. 194. 200. 200
 1330 Niceph. Gregoras. p. 168
 1344 Edwardus 3. R. Angl.
Thomas de Walsingham.
Iohn Cotovicus. p. 230. 266.
 1354 Ioh. Cantacuzenus Emp. of Constant. p. 168. 232. 247.
Geo. Codinus.
Damasen the Monke. p. 149. 200. 200. 201.
 1390 Froissard.
Antor Fasciculi temp. p. 176. 179. 197. 201.
Anselmus Frater Franciscanus. p. 43 1410 Iustinianus Patr. Ven.

- 1411 Sigismundus Imp. Germ. p. 226
 1445 Antoninus Florentinus. p. 139. 140. 179. 200. 200. 201 1448 Fredericus Imp. Germ.
 1472 Bapt. Platina. 223. 236. 246.
 1484 Coccinus Sabellianus. p. 160. 160. 200
 1488 Maximilianus I. Imp.
 1490 Hermannus Schedell, autor Chronicorum. p. 189. 200. 200. 209. 227.
 1494 Phil. Bergomensis. p. 181. 200. 200. 201.
 1499 Bapt. Mantuanus. 245.
 1506 Raphael Volaterranus. p. 125. 131. 200. 200
 1536 Melanchthon. p. 194.
 Ludovicus Patavinus: 1550 Seb. Munsterus.
 1551 Confessio Saxonica. p. 193. 196. 200
 Polydorus Virgilius.
 Hist. Magdeburgica. p. 194. 200
 1560 Iohn Foxe. p. 197. 198. 200. 200. 201.
 1571 Michael ab Yffelt. p. 176. 186.
 1576 Lamb. Danaus. p. 197.
 1593 Comus Ep. Alexand. Suf- fragan unto the Patriarke 237.
 Hospius. p. 196. 200. 200. 201. 209.
 1593 Maximus Bishop of Cubera. p. 169. 200. 200. 201.
 1600 Henr. Orans. p. 125. 131. 194. 200. 200. 200. 201.

All these, besides the publike Martyrologies both Greeke and Roman, besides also the publike Liturgies and Monuments of those Churches, the learned men, all of them, of the Romish parties, and many of the Churches of the reformation, whose names would fill a Catalogue. If among these we have not one of credit, neither Author in this relation, nor Prince nor Prelate in their actions: hard is our hap, and let the adversaries have the honour. But what one ranke of these have said, and what the rest have done in Saint Georges honour, we shall now see in their severall places. And lest that any of our Authors whose authoritie wee use, may be thought not to speake of George a Martyr, con-tradistinct from him of Alexandria: it will, I take it, bee a diffe-difference sufficient that we produce a George of Cappadocia, apparelled with those circumstances, or any of them which before we noted, to be the termes of difference, betweene the Arian, and our Martyr. If all our Authors doe agree in this, they speake the same : and this I doubt not, but I shall easily make apparant by the evidence:

CHAP.

155

CHAP. III.

(1) The state of learning in the Church divided into two naturall dayes. (2) The time and learning of venerable Bede. (3) His testimonies of Saint George. (4) Of Dacianus King of Persia, and who he was, (5) Persia taken in some Authors for the Easterne Countreiss. (6) A reconciliation of the other doubts touching this Dacianus. (7) The Martyrologies of Vluardus, Rabanus Maurus, and Norgerus. (8) Saint George how said to have converted many people. (9) The witnesse of Vincentius, Iacobus, and Antoninus Florent. (10) Vestem exuere militarem, the meaning of it, and when used. (11) The suffrage of Sabellicus, Schedel, Bergomenis, and Volateran.

(1)

Here is an old tradition, that the world should last 6000. yeeres, and no longer: two of them before the Law; two under it; and two after. Which though it hath not beene exactly true, of the two first; and that the third is doubtfull; yet the conceit is tollerable; and for as much of it as is past, somewhat neere the computation and account of time, recited in it. We will be therefore bold, to take for granted, that the Christian Church is of two thousand yeeres continuance: which granted or supposed, we will resemble it, or the state of learning rather in it, unto two naturall daies; each, of a thousand yeeres speece: and this the rather, because the Lord hath said, that in his sight, a thousand yeeres are but as one day. The first of these, we take to have begun even at the first rising of the Sonne of Righteousnesse: and for the morning of it, allow the first three Centuries, even till the time of Constantine. The noon-tide watch thereof, we make to be of the three Centuries ensuing:

M 3

Cent. 4. c. 4

Chronol.

Ennead. 9

ensuing : of which, and especially the first, the Magdeburgians give this censure, Habuit hac ætas si qua unquam alia, plurimos prestantes et illustres Doctores. And certainly there never shined more glorious lights in the house of God, than in those ages : the Sunne of learning, being then in the very height, and Zenith of it. Long it continued not in that full glory, till it declined into an evening ; to which we doe allot the three next ages : when as the beames thereof grew low, and the light obscurer. And now at last we are benighted, even covered over with Æ Cymerial darknesse of ignorance ; a darkenesse no lesse grosse and palpable, than that of Ægypt. Ballarmine calls it, Sæculum infelix, in quo Scriptores illustres nulli, nulla Concilia ; A most unhappy age, wherein were neither famous Writers, nor frequent Councils. Sebellius as rightly, mirum est, quanta omnium bonarum artium oblivio, per id tempus mortalium animos obreperit : a prodigie it was to see, how generall forgetfulness of all good literature, had at this time invaded and possessed the mindes of men. Which night continued, for 150. yeeres, or thereabout, those Writers which wee meet with from the yeere 900. untill then, as they were few, so were they but as a few smaller Statues in the darkest midnight. This night once past, the dawning of the second day at last appeared ; and we extend the morning of it even to the first beginning of the last Century : in which there was at first a struggling betweene light and darkenesse ; but afterwards the light of learning got the better, and by degrees made way to usher in the second noone-tide. Which second noone-tide wee begin about the yeere 1500. and hitherto it hath continued ; the light of learning never shining with more perfect glory, than at the present. How long it will continue thus, is above our knowledge : but as it is, we may almost assure me with Ramus, Majorem Dactorum bonorum & operum præsentium, scito non vidimus, quam totis antea quatuordecim majoris nostri viderant. Our age hath brought us forth more worthy works, and famous Writers, than all the rest that went before us.

Prefat. in scho.
Mathem.

(2) If it be asked, to what use serves this observation :

we

wee answer that it is to this. First that it may appeare, that never any age hath beene so void of learned, or barren of good men, that is not able to produce some testimony of good gredit, in the behalfe of George the Martyr. Next, that in all times we expect not, either an equall number of witnesses, or equall parts, in such as are produced to give in evidence: but that we looke for them, and judge of them, according to their times and ages. Already we are past the noonetide, of the first of these two dayes: in which, referring other of our witnesses to their proper places; we have made use onely of Enschius, S. Ambrose and of Pope Gelasius. In the next place and time, wee meet with Venerable Beda, who dyed about the yeece 734. A man that saw as cleerely, as any whomsoever, that lived in any part of the whole evening: and one who for the excellency of his endowments, and piety, obtained that adjunct. Camden entituleth him, the singular glory and ornament of England. In Brigant. and Malmesbury affirms more fully, that he was one, more fit to be admired than praised; who being borne in the extreamest corner of the world, did yet enlighten all of it, with the beames of his learning. Vir erat, saith he, quem mirari facilius, quam digne predicare possis: qui in extremo natum orbis angulo, doctrina corusco terras omnes perstrinxerat. Hist. de Regib. Ang. 12 Whom lest we should suspect, as partiall in his praises, wee have a German Poet, thus speaking unto Brittaine.

Quid tibi divinumq, Bedam (doctissimus olim Dum varias annis benequi cognoverat artes) Debemus.

Camden in Brit.

The fence imperfect, but thus to be conceived.

Brittaine, to thee, divinest Bede we owe,
Who did alone all parts of learning know.

(3) The witnesse being such, his testimonie will bee taken with lesse scrupule: the rather, because there is not any thing of his which hath beene justly questioned, but his

M 4

Ex-

Cantab. II. c. 6

Tom. 3

English History; as having in it more of the miracles so common in the peoples mouths, than may be well allowed of. But evē that piece also, modeste et circumspēcto judicio, is to be censured sparingly, and with great temper. His testimonies of S: George are two: the one of them in his Martyrologies; the other in his Ephimerides. First in his Martyrology, on the 23. of Aprill, or in the Latine Computation, on the 9. of the Calends of May, we reade it thus. Natale S. Georgii Martyris, qui sub Daciano Rege Persarum potentissimo, qui dominabatur super 70. Reges, multis miraculis clavis, plurimosq; convertit ad fidem Christi: simul et Alexandram uxorem ipsius Daciani, usq; ad Martyrium confortavit. Ipse vero novissime decollatus, Martyrium complevit; quamvis gesta passionis ejus inter Apocryphas connumerentur Scripturas. Id est. The Passion, of S. George the Martyr, who under Dacianus the most, mighty King of Persia, Lord of no lesse than seventy tributary Princes, was famous for his miracles, and for converting many to the faith of Christ; of which the Emperesse Alexandra, the wife of Dacianus, continued constant in it even unto the death. This George at last beheld, received the crowne of Martyrdome: although the Story of his Passion be reckoned as Apocryphall. And in his Ephimerides, on the same ninth of the May-Calends; thus:

*Non docet Fortunatumq; et Achillem junctos.
Hac etiam invito mundum qui sanguine remittis.
Infinita refert Georgi sancta Trophæa.*

This ninth day doth of Fortunatus tell,
And of Achilles, joined together well.
And of thee George, who didst the world neglect,
And holy trophæes in thy blood erect.

(4) The first of these two testimonies, as it affirms the death and sufferings of S. George; so are there in it, some things which require a Commentary. For not to speake of Alexandra, Diocletians Lady, and her conversion by Saint George,

George, wherein I formerly have declared what I conceive thereof, and of the Story in that passage : here have we that of Dacianus, not yet touched, not touched as yet, because we purposed to deferre it, untill we came to speake of Beda, who is the first Author of all now extant, which hath made any mention of this Dacianus. A passage, as Baronius thought, of an old Arian Legend, which he speakes of, in his Annotations on the Roman Martyrology, where it is said that George, the Arian George, as he supposeth, did suffer many torments at the hands of Dacianus a King of Persia. Onely the difference is, and that not much, that there the tributary Kings are five in number more, than here in Venerable Beda. This Doctor Reynolds useth as a closing argument, to proove our S: to bee the Arian George of Alexandria : and this our selves alledged in the behalfe of Calvin, to shew what cause he had, to make S. George a counterfeit, or Larva. The proesse was, that there was never at, or about that time, a King of Persia of that name, and greatnesse of Command; and that this Dacianus is in other of our Authors, made to be President or Lieutenant under Diocletian; therefore in likelihood, our Authors not agreeing, and no such King as he in nature; the whole Story of S: George is false and forged. This is the maine of all that may be said against us, touching Dacianus; and this is easie to bee answered. For the dispatch whereof, wee must looke backe a little on the condition of the Roman Empire, at the time of S. Georges sufferings : The East parts of it governed, as before I said, by Diocletian; and the West, by Maximian. These two, the better to direct and manage the affaires of State, had tooke unto themselves two Cesars : whereof the one was named Galerius Maximianus, assumed by Diocletian, and under him Lieutenant Generall, or Lord President of the Easterne Countries. Now this Galerius Caesar, was by birth a Dacian; and afterwards, successeur unto Diocletian, in all those parts that hee commanded. That he was borne in Dacia, is affirmed by S. Hieromes Latine copie of Eusebius Chronicon, where thus wee reade it : Galerius in Dacia hand longe à Sardica natus, that hee was borne borne in Dacia, not farre from Sardica. The same affirmed in the Epitome of Aurelius Victor, that hee was borne in Dacia; Ortus Dacia Ripensi, repeated in the selfe same words by Paul the Deacon, in the 11. Booke of his Historia Miscella; and out of them, by Abbas Vſpergenſis in his Chronica, and divers others. That he succeeded Diocletian in the greatneſſe and extent of his command, (after that he and Maximian had ſurrendred up the Empire;) is a thing ſo plaine in Story, that no man conſeruant in the Hiſtorians of thoſe times, but exactly knowes it. Hereupon we inferre, that probably this Dacianus mentioned in the Story, was that Galerius Maximianus, who afterwards was Emperour; and had the Eaſterne parts, all of them, of that Empire, under his ſubjection. And this we doe the rather ſancy to bee probable, becauſe denominations taken from the birth-place of their Princes, were not accounted novelties among the Romans. For Adrianus, wee well know, aſſumed that name from Adria, a Towne of Italy, where hee was borne. And not to ſeek for more examples, we finde that Diocletian, borne in a Village of Dalmatia, called Dioclea, added this termination to the place of his Nativitie: that ſo his name might be more plauſible among the Romans, whoſe governance hee had then undertaken. Ubi Romani orbis potentiam cepit, Graecum nomen in Romanum uerum convertit, as mine Author hath it. Adde hereunto, that this Galerius was alwaies a moſt bitter enemy of the Church of Chriſt, which he had perſecuted from his youth: and then perhaps hee may more eaſily be beleevd, to bee this Dacianus, the rather, ſince Dacianus as hee was the inſtrument of Diocletians cruelty, is called in many of our Authors, Dacianus Praeſes, which name of Praeſes, is in the Roman Martyrology given to Galerius alſo, in the ſame regard; Quirinus ſub Galerio Praefide pro fide Chriſti in ſumum precipitatus eſt, &c. See the Annotations. Prudentius alſo in an Hymne on the ſame Quirinus, calls him Dux Galerius: a title in the Latine of thoſe times, not different from that of Praeſes:

April. 23

(5) But here it may be queſtioned, how Dacianus, admitted-

Aurel. Victor.
Epitome c. 39

Roman-Mart.
June 4

Peri Steph. 7

mitting that hee were the same, with Galerius the Dacian, can be supposed to be a King of Persia: considering that the Persians had at that time, a Prince of their owne royall stocke, knowne by the name of Narsus, who dyed about the yeere 307. To this wee answer, that Venerable Bede spake according to the manner of the times, in which hee lived: wherein the Persians, having subdued the Roman forces, were, and had so beene long before, the absolute masters, of almost all those Countries, which Galerius once commanded. Which being so, the East parts of the Roman Empire, under the command of the Kings of Persia, and in particular, the Holy-Land, where Lydda is, being in their Dominions: those Countries did in common speech, passe by the name of Persia. Just as at this day, wee call those severall parts of the Turkish Empire, once members of the Assyrian, Greeks and Roman Monarchies, by the common name of Turkey: or as we call all Easterne Churches, the Greeke Church, because they have communion at this time, with the Patriarch of Constantinople. So Belarminus doth call Cardinal Bessarion, a Grecian, borne at Trabezond; Bessarion, natus Græcus, patriæ Trapezuntinus, &c. Descript. Eccl. as he there hath it: whereas the Towne of Trabezond is far enough from Greece, in the heart of Capadocia. So also Witellius of Tyre, doth call all those within the land of Palestine, who were enemies unto the Faith, & then possessours of that Countrey, by the name of Persæ. And so the Monke of Malmesbury, shewing the difference betwene the East and Westerne Nations, hath told us, that the Occidentals, being more stubborne and impatient of the yoke, have often changed their Masters: whereas the Easterne people being more dull and womanish, have beene continually the Vassals of the Persians. Romanus denique imperium prius apud Hist. de Reg. Angl. Francos, postea ad Tartaros declinavit: Orientales semper (understand him of the latter times) apud Persas durat. Which note of his, could not be true, is taken of the Persians, as the inhabitants onely of that Province, commonly called Persia the Saracens, having before expelled the Persians; and themselves, being in the time of Malmesbury, chased out of these.

these Countries by the Turks. Therefore we must conceive, that the name of Persian, was a common appellation of the Easterne people, in those times, just as the Turkeas and Easterne Nations, doth call all Westerne Christians, by the name of Franks. Adde hereunto, that Lidda or Diafpolis, there where S. George was buried, and his Passion celebrated, is said in many of our Authors, to be a Towne of Persia: though a Towne of Palestina; there being no such Towne as that in the bounds of Berberia, properly so called: and then as wee have found out Dacianus; so wee have shewne some reasons, why he is called a King of Persia, or of the Perfians. I adde yet further, that this Galerius Dacianus, might with good reason be called King of Persia, of Persia properly so called: as having vanquished Narjes, the King thereof, with a mighty overthrow; seized on his Campe, taken his sisters, wives, and children; brought thence as Captives, all the Nobility almost, Ergazam opulentissimam, and an huge masse of treasure: And not onely, but Regem ipsum in solitudine regis, he had compelled the King to forsake his Country, and fly for shelter to the Deserts: as Paul the Deacon tels the story.

(6) Let this be also granted; yet what shall be replied to this, that Dacianus is there made the Lord of seventy tributary Kings: or what can be produced to reconcile those Authors, which make him not an Emperour; to these which doe affirme it? This I suppose we may make good, without much difficulty. We read in Scripture that Abasuerus King of Persia, had under his Dominion, no fewer than 127. Provinces: most of the which, were first subjected by the Greekes; and after by the Romanes. We read also in Tacitus, how ordinary a thing it was, in the height and pride of the Roman greatnesse; Habere servitutis instrumenta etiam & Reges: to suffer Kings in many of the Conquered Nations, and to employ them as their engines, thereby to bring the people into greater bondage. Put this together, and wee shall see no inconvenience to ensue, if wee should peremptorily affirme, that under the command and Empire of Galerius Dacianus, sole ruler of the Easterne

Coun-

Countries; there were no lesse than 70. tributary Kings, and inferiour Princes. As for the pretended disagreement, which is observed betweene our Authors; we doe thus reconcile it. Viz. That those which make him President, or Lieutenant generall under Diocletian; speake of him, as hee was at the time of our Martyrs suffering: Commander of the Imperiall Armies, and the designed successeur, and a chiefe agent in the persecution. See what was said before of Galerius Prefes. Sect. 4. But Venerable Bede, and those which call him King, report him as he was in power, though not in title; or rather call him King by way of anticipation; just as the Italian shores in Virgil, are called Lavinia littora, before that name was given unto them; because in short time after, in honour of Lavinia, they were so denominated. Now why the story should be written of Galerius, by the name of Dacianus; or why the sufferings of our Martyr, imputed rather unto Dacianus, than to Diocletian: this I conceive to be the art of those, who even whilst both the tyrants lived, committed it to writing; that so they might decline the envie of their undertakings, and not incur the high displeasure of the Persecutors. This I conceive to bee sufficient in answer unto that exception touching Dacianus: which may be easily admitted, without the least offence to truth, and much unto the credit of the Venerable Author. But be it what it will, I shall beleeeve any thing of it, sooner then yeeld unto Baronius, that this of Dacianus was any fragment of the Arian Legend which hee speakes of. Nay this one circumstance perswades me, that it was not so; but rather that the Arians had adulterated and corrupted that History which they found written of S. George: or that in framing of the Legends, some passages in the acts of George the Arian, might by a want of judgement, fatall unto that kind of Writers, be mingled and inserted in S. Georges story. For what had George the Arian, to doe with any Dacianus King of Persia, whether so called properly, or by denomination taken from his Country: especially not suffering; in any time of publicke persecution, or by command of any Prince, call him what you will; but onely by the fury of a mixt

mixt and outrageous multitude. If any reason thus, the storie as it is related by Venerable Bede, is perplexed, and full of intricate difficulties; and therefore nothing in it true, or therefore there was no such Martyr: how infinite are the Saints that must be degraded, whose stories are no lesse perplexed, than this of ours, though never quarrell'd

(7) This difficultie over, we now proceed unto the further examination of our witnesses, beginning first with those, which are the first in time: All of them Authors also of the same kinde, viz. of Martyrologies. The first of these is Usuardus, one of the Schollers of Alcuinus, who flourished in the yeere 812. and at the suite of Charles the Great, compos'd his Martyrologic, Martyrologium satis accuratum & celebre, quo multa Ecclesie usantur. A peece of good esteeme, and great diligence, and therefore used in many Churches. So saith the Cardinall The evidence which wee receive from him, is this. 9. Cal. Maij. In Perside, civitate Diopsoli, passio S. Georgij Martyris, gloriosi ante signani, clarique miraculis: cuius gesta passionis, etsi inter Apocryphas numerentur Scripturas, tamen illustrissimum ejus martyrium, inter coronas Martyrum, Ecclesia Dei venerabiliter honorat. Vpon the 23. of April, the death and passion of Saint George the Martyr, that glorious leader, but more famous by his miracles, is celebrated in Diopsolis, a towne of Persia: the story of whose Passion, though reckoned as Apocryphall, doth nothing prejudice the truth and glories of his Martyrdome, so celebrated in the Church. In the next place we have the testimonie of Rabanus Maurus, Archbishop of Mentz, who lived about the yeere 835. Vir aequè doctus & pius, A man (saith Bellarmino, and certainly his workes affirme no lesse) both learned and religious. His testimony is the same with Venerable Bedes, viz. Nativitas S. Georgij Martyris, qui sub Daciano &c. Onely he ends it thus, Cuius vitam & passionem scriptam legi; that he had seene the life and death of George in writing: but what it was, or by whom written, that he doth not say. In the next place we have the Martyrologic of one Nosgerus, extant in the 6. Tome of Canisius Antiquæ lectiones, as also was the former. The Author of

Loc. quo. supr.

of it dyed about the yeere 912. and was a Monke of Sengall, or Monastery S. Galli, a place amongst the Switzers. His evidence compounded equally out of Bede, and Usuard; the first part taken from the former; the conclusion from the latter: himselfe inserting this onely in the middle betweene both; that after many inexpressible torments, being at last beheaded, he perfected that glorious worke, by the effusion of his bloud. In Perside, civitate Diospoli, passio S. Georgij Martyris, qui sub Daciano Rege Persarum potentissimo, qui dominabatur supra 70. Reges, multis miraculis, claruit, plurimosque convertit ad fidem Christi, &c. hitherto out of Bede: Ipse vero post multos & inauditos agones novissime decollatus, Martyrium suum sanguinis effusione consummavit. Then followes out of Usuardus, Cujus gesta passionis etsi inter Apocryphas, &c. as before we had it.

(8) In these the testimonies of Bede, Rabanus Maurus, and Norgerus, we finde it mentioned of Saint George; Plurimosque ad fidem Christi convertit, that he converted many to the faith of Christ. And answerable hereunto, Vincentius Belvacensis, Ad eius predicationem credidit. S. Vincentius, Specul. histor. lib. 12. c. 128. That by the Preaching of Saint George, Saint Vincent who received the crowne of Martyrdome in Spaine, received the Gospell: Which doubtlesse must bee understood of private reasonings, and friendly conference, with those whose soules he chiefly tendred: not by the way of any publike Ministry, wherein he never was intrusted. And certainly the Faithfull of the times Primitive, especially during the heat of Persecution, did much promote the holy Gospell, by such private and domesticke meanes, if I may so call it: passing from house to house, and from man to man, so to bring Peace unto the one, Salvation to the other. Wherefore perhaps Cecilius calls the Christians generally, Latebrosam & Lucifugam nationem, in publico mutam, in angulis gar- In Minutios. A lie and corner-creeing kinde of people, active in private places, but still and quiet in the publike. Besides which way of reasoning, he was occasionally a meanes of converting others, by his constant sufferings. Which many of the people seeing, and of the Souldiers not a few, they they beleev'd in Christ, and glorified the name of God: ἡ πολλὰς πρὸς τὴν εἰς χριστὸν μεταστροφὴν πλοῦται, as the Greeke Anthologion hath it; particularly that Anatolius and Proteus, two souldiers of especiall ranke, were by that meanes converted, and forthwith executed, as in Metaphrastes. Adde hereunto that for the time he was in prison, he did not one-ly strengthen and confirme many in the holy faith, but he converted others to it: multosque esse qui in carcerem ven-rent, at à S. Georgio docerentur, as in the storie. It seemes, that some not well acquainted with the calling and condition of our Martyr, have made him very famous in the arts of Preaching: as one that first converted the Armenians and Iberi, now called Georgians. For Michael ab Yffelt a Low-Country Writer, telling what honours, by that people, are afforded unto Saint George, relates it thus: Cur vero tantum honore habeant D. illum Georgium, causam nonnulli afferunt, quòd ille primus ad fidem Christi, Armenos Iberosque convertisset. But whosoever those nonnulli are, that so report it, they are no question in an error: there being in the Ecclesiasticall historians, another and more likely meanes of their conversion; on which this Michael doth reflect in these words that follow; Licet alijs illud cuiusdam puella miraculis & virtutibus tribuunt.

(9) In the next place we have the suffrage of Vincentius, Bishop of Beau-vein in France, Anno 1250. A man of that deepe learning, that the great Schoole-man Thomas Aquina is supposed (and Bellarmino can hardly save him harme-lesse in it) to take a great part of his Prima secunda, and secunda secunda, word for word, out of the first and third bookes of this Vincentius speculum morale. Hee in the twelfth booke of his speculum historigale, doth report the story thus:
Sub persecutione Daciani (in diverse passages before hee calls him Dacianus Præses) venit de Cappadocia Georgius miles. Qui videns Christianorum angustias, rogatus omnibus que habebat, militarem vestem exuit, & indutus veste Christianorum, in modum sacrificantium se obiecit; atque in conspectu omnium exclamavit dicens, Omnes dñ gentium demonia, Dominus autem ce-los fecit. Cui statim Dacianus ira repletus, ait, Qua presumptione vel

vel dignitate hoc audes, ut deos nostros demones esse dicas? Dic tamen unde es, et quomodo vocaris: qui respondit, Christianus sum, Georgius vocor, generis et militis Cappadocius: sed cuncta "deservi, ut liberius Deo caliservirem, &c. During the per"secution rais'd by the President or Lievetenant generall
 "Dacianus, came George a Cappadocian Knight ~~into the~~
 "into the Court. Who seeing into what miserable streights
 "the poore Christians were driven, making a doale of all
 "he had, put off his military or Knightly habit, and mani-
 "festing that he was a Christian, he rush'd into the middest
 "of the Idolaters: and in the hearing of them all, cryed
 "out, that all the deities of the Gentiles were but divels,
 "and that it was the Lord onely which had made the hea"vens. To whom the President, With what presumpti"on or upon confidence of what high dignity, dost thou "affirme, that our gods are divels? tell us thy name, and "whence thou art. Who presently returned this answer: I "am (saith he) a Christian, my name, George; my country,
 "Cappadocia; and there of honourable ranke: but I have "willingly abandoned all, to serve the God of heaven with "greater freedome, &c. Then followeth an enumeration of those severall torments, which by the Presidents command were inflicted on him: as viz. that they put him on the racke, and dislocated almost every member of his body; next, that with burning fire-brands they made a passage to his bowels, chafing the bleeding wounds with salt: that afterwards they bound him to a brazen wheele, armed round about with swords [gladijs his acutis circumscriptis] and rowled him on it, which when it hurt him not, they cast him in a vessell full of boyling leade: after all which, seeing him still invincible, he was condemned to be headed. And then it followes in the close of all, martyrizatus autem est in Perside, civitate Dioffoli, he suffered in Dioffolis, a Citie of the Persians, upon the 23. of Aprill. But here in this last circumstance, I meane, as Vincentius was deceived himselfe, so Anoninus and some others which tooke V. chap. 2. sect. 4.
 the passage upon trust, were deceived by him: the reason of his errour, and the easinesse thereof, wee have shewne N already:

Be

already: it is enough that here we note it, as in the place most proper. To this agrees, in the maine of it, Iacobus de Voragine: Georgius tribunus, genere Cappadox, &c. George, one of the Tribunes, by birth a Cappadocian, &c. The next that followeth, is that doughtie storie of the Libyan Dragon: which told, he thus proceeds unto the storie, Imperantibus Diocletiano et Maximimiano sub præsidi Daciano tanta persecutio Christianorum fuit, ut infra annum manserunt decem milia martyris coronarentur. Unde inter tot tormentorum millia multi Christianorum deficiebant & idolis immolabant. Quod videtur S. Georgius &c. During the Empire of Diocletian and Maximian, there was so great a persecution raised by the Proud and Lieverenant Dacianus, that in one moneth, 10000. Christians were crowned with martyrdom: what time, amongst so many thousand torments which were then in use, many did fall away from God, and offered sacrifice to the Idols. Which when Saint George beheld, he made a dole of all his wealth unto the poore, &c. The rest that followes, differs not at all from that before related by Vincentius, save that in answer to the question of the President, his reply is this, Georgius vocor, ex nobili Cappadocium prosapia ortus, that he was called George, and borne of the most noble Families of Cappadocia. And then it followeth, Palestinam vero Christo favente devici, which I conceive rather thus to have beene written, in Palestina Christo favente vixi, that though he was a Cappadocian borne, he had lived in Palestine: which agrees punctually with that of Metaphrastes above mentioned. Next unto him, comes Antoninus Florentinus, who takes the storie almost word for word, out of Vincentius, whom he professeth for his Author: Onely he tels us that the history of George is reckoned as Apocryphall; not that he was no Martyr, but that there are some passages therein scarce worthy credit. Ponitur autem Legenda eius inter Apocryphas Scripturas, non quia verè Martyr fuerit pro confessione nominis Christi, sed propter quadam que notantur in ea de veritate dubia. Which passages I have observed already. To end this section, the booke entitled Fasciculus temporum, written by a Carthusian Monke of the

Par. I. lib. 8.
sect. 23.

V. Part 2. ch. 1.
sect. 12 & chap.
2. sect. 10.

the fourteenth Centurie, (Bellarmino calls his name Wernerus) and printed in the yeere 1476. by Conradus Hoembercha: ad Annum 291. pag. 33. doth ranke our George among the Martyrs of that yeere, betweene Pantaleon and Iustus: of which Pantaleon, called otherwise Pantaleemon, Nicaphorus at large relates the storie; and placeth him about the time of Saint Georges suffering, but as Wernerus doth, before it.

(10) In that which we alledge out of Vincentius Belvacensis, there is one circumstance especially worthy our notice: viz. that having made a dole of all his substance, vestem militarem exuit; Saint George put off his militarie or Knightly habit, and so addrest himselfe to speake in the behalfe of the truth and Gospell. Which putting off his militarie habiliments, is not, as I conceive it, the disrobing of himselfe of his Souldiers coate or cassocke onely, but rather the abandoning of his militarie or his Knightly Belt, the honourable marke of his well deserving. For in the Roman Empire, it was in custome with the Prince, to honour men of speciall merit, with a degree above the rest: which was performed by an investing of them with a militarie girdle, and such knightly ornaments. This was called cingula militiae honorare. Now they that were thus honoured, used not to come into the Emperours sight and presence, without the habit of this order: To which Saint Chrysostome alludeth, οὐδὲς ἄν ἀρχόντων χάρις (ἄνευ τῆς) χαλμύδος τοιμήσειεν ἀνὸρ ὡς τὸ δίδωμα ἔχοντι. in that his second Homilie on the Corinthians. This militarie Belt thus given, was an engagement of the partie so invested, more then ordinarie, unto the service of the Prince: so strict and binding, that such as had received the faith, and made a conscience of their waies, used commonly to cast it from them, because of that incompatibilitie which was betweene that Knightly honour, and their holy calling. A matter frequent in the times of persecution, in such especially as would not covertly conceale their faith in Christ, or dissemble their religion. We may take Iovinian for an instance. The meaning then is this, that George no longer willing to continue in the service

“ he finished his course by the losing of his head. Philippus Bergemonfis, an Austm Fryer, who lived about the same time, and made a supplement unto this Chronica of Herman-nus Schedel, reports the storie in the same words: save that he addes et salis confricationem, the chafing of his wounded body with salt, unto the residue of his torments. And in the last place, Volaterran, of whom wee have already spoken, affirms this for us; Georgius Martyr, genere Cappadox, Tribunus militum sub Diocletiano morabat: Saint George the Martyr, a Cappadocian by his Country, served as a Tribune of the Souldiers under the Emperour Diocletian. Thus have wee drawne together in this present Chapter, the testimonies of the learned men in the western parts, since the division of the Churches: I meane of those who have historically delivered any thing unto us of our blessed Martyr. Of which, if any shall affirme that they reach not home, and faile in many of those particulars which are before related out of Metaphrastes: the answer will be very easie. For first, these Authors agree exactly with him in all points of substance, the being of Saint George, that hee was a man, and also his well-being, that hee was an holy man, a blessed Martyr: which is the principall point in question betwixt his enemies and us. Wee answer secondly, that Saint George suffering in the East, and being reckoned as a Saint in the Church of Greece; it cannot bee expected that the particulars of his birth and quality, should bee recounted so exactly by the Writers of the Western Churches: as on the other side, how many are the Martyrs celebrated in the Churches of the West, of great name and eminence, that are but briefly touched, if at all remembered by the Greekes. Wee rather may conclude from hence, that certainly Saint George was of speciall merit in the Church of God: since being, as hee was, of Greece, and that hee suffered in those countries; there is so much delivered of him in the Latine Writers, as wee finde there is.

is. Our next inquirie therefore, shall be amongst the Grecian monuments, and afterwards amongst some few, but eminent men, of the Protestant partie: that wee may see thereby, how generall a consent there is in all sorts of Writers in Saint Georges cause.

CHAP.

CHAP. IV:

(1) The testimony given Saint George in some publique monuments of the Greeke Church. (2) Saint George called μαχαμαδης, and Επιμορθε. (3) The evidence of the Fasti Siculi, Cedrenus, the Lady Anne Comnena, Nicephorus Callistus, and Nicephorus Gregoras. (4) Of Contacuzenus, Maximus, and Damascen the Monke. (5) Of Callicles. (6) and Philes, two Greeke Poets. (7) Of the Magdeburgians, and some Lutheran Divines. (8) Of the Churches of Saxony, Brandenburg, and Pomerland, &c. (9) The suffrage of Holpinian, and Danzus, both Calvinists. (10) The testimony and assent of Master Fox, in his Acts and Monuments. (11) The Arian George condemned by those, who speake with honour of our Martyr. (12). A recollection and application of the whole proofes.

(1)

He History of Saint George, as it was writ by Metaphrastes, informes us of him, that he was by birth, of Cappadocia, and of noble parentage: that having lost his father, hee betooke himselfe unto the warres, was by the Emperour Diocletian, raised to great dignity and honours, and at the last beheaded for the testimony of the Gospell. This is the sum and substance of S. Georges story, which if we cannot prove by a cloud of witnesses, not yet produced; wee will quit the cause and those both of the Greeke Churches, and of the Protestant, although these last speake not so punctually of some particulars, as the former doe. And first the Anthologion, which is a publike monument of the Greek Church; hath it thus, τῇ αὐτῇ μὲν καὶ μὴν τῷ ἀγίῳ καὶ ἐνδόξῳ, καὶ μαχαμαρθε τῷ Γεωργίῳ, Επιμορθε, i.e. Vpon the 23. of Aprill, is celebrated the memoriall of the most holy, famous, and honou.

N4

honourable Martyr George, called commonly Tropaophorus, then for the History, Ο ἑνδοξος καὶ θαυμαστός καὶ μέγας μάρτυς Γεώργιος καὶ τῶν χρόνων ὑπὸ Διοκλητιανῶν τῷ βασιλεῖ, ἐν χωρῇ τῇ Καππαδοκίᾳ, ἦν ἐπισημὸς, ἐν τῇ τριβύων διαβέβησας, &c. The famous, wonderfull, and honourable Martyr George, lived in the time of Diocletian the Emperour. A Cappadocian by his Country, and of Noble parentage: who being first made a Colonel, or a Tribune of the Souldiers, was afterwards advanced unto the dignity of a Count Imperiall. Τῷ δ' ἐν βασιλείᾳ τὸν καὶ χρίσαντῶν ἀδύνοσι, &c. The Emperour then beginning to rage against the Church, Saint George, though not yet fainted, advanced into the presence, made himselfe knowne to bee a Christian: πῶς ἰδὼν ματαύτητα καὶ ἀδύνατον διελέχων, &c. Vpbraiding openly the vanity and the impotency of their Idols, and of all those which trusted in them. Hereupon they assaulted him with torments, such as before are mentioned in Metaphrases, and in the close of all, ὁ μὲν αὖτις πῶν καρπὸν ἀπὸ μύθου, it tells us that hee was beheaded: which in the selfe same words we finde in the Menology, for the month of April, In the Menology for November, and the 3. day of it, wee reade as followeth. Ο ἑνδοξὸς καὶ χρίστος μεγαλομάρτυς Γεώργιος, ἐν τοῖς χρόνοις ἦν Διοκλητιανῶν πρὸς πατρὸς ὑπὸ Καππαδοκίᾳ, ἐν μὲν δὲ Παλαιστίνῃ. Ἀγωνίῃς ὃ δείμα, καὶ φύσας τῶν ἀγαθῶν, καὶ εἰς ἐκκλησίαν, &c. The honourable and famous Martyr of Christ Iesus, George, lived in the dayes of Diocletian: a Cappadocian by his father, but his mother was of Palestine. A gentleman he was of a noble parentage; his education, godly; and in his disposition very sweet and gracious. Then follow all the circumstances of his age and dignities, together with his fathers death, and mothers journey with him, into Palestine: according as it is related by Metaphrases. After come the particulars of his discourses with the Tyrants, the torments which he suffered; those many practises which they used to alter his opinion: and in the end, ξίφει πῶν καρπὸν ἀπὸ τέμελι, he was beheaded with the sword. The manner of his death, is by the Anthologion moulded thus, into a Distich.

Εχθροῦ

Ἐχθροὺς ὁ τέμνων Γεώργι' ἐν μάχαις, Ἐκὼν παρ' ἐχθρῶν τέμνεται διὰ ξίφους.

*George, who in fight his enemies oft made dead;
Is willing, by their hands, to lose his head.*

(2) In these two testimonies of the Anthologion, and Greeke Menologies, we finde two circumstances, which doe adde exceedingly unto the honour of our Martyr: viz. a title and an adjunct. The title which is given him here, and indeed every where in the Greeke Liturgies, is μαγαλομαρτυς, or the honourable Martyr. We need not seeke particulars, they will present themselves hereafter, as occasion is; Simeon Metaphrastes gives the same title to him, in the ἐπιγραφή of his story, which is translated, but improperly, Vita S. Georgij Magni Martyris, as in that also attributed to Paschates. I say improperly, for as I am informed by the right reverend Father in God, my Lord of Chichester, to whose humanity I stand engaged for many favours, they which translate it, Magnus Martyr, were deceived: and I in them. It is a title given (saith he) onely to honourable personages in the Greeke Stories and Menologies, whether Souldiers, or otherwise: the Martyrs having sundry titles to distinguish them, according to their qualities and severall conditions. S. Stephen called πρωτομαρτυς, &c so S. Thecla, they being the first Martyrs of their severall sexes: Virgins, stiled καλλιμαρτυρες, persons of honourable calling, μαχαλομαρτυρες, Bishops or Priests, ισχυρ μαρτυρες, men of inferiour qualitie, ἀγιοι μαρτυρες, and Christ our Saviour himselfe, for ever blessed, μείζας ὁ μαρτυς, the greater Martyr. So that the stile of μαγαλομαρτυς, so often given unto S. George, is prooffe sufficient of it selfe, that he was of honourable ranke, and marke sufficient to distinguish him from George the Arian: The adjunct which is here bestowed upon our Martyr, is ἑταλοφόνος. Baronius negligently reads it Tropelophornus, in his notes upon the Martyrologie. An adjunct which appears almost as often as the St. and is but seldome severed from him.

him; not in their Liturgies alone, and publike monuments, but in the workes of private persons. Iohn Enchautes an Eastern Bishop in the time of Constantinus Monomachus, Anno 1053. or thereabouts, thus calls S. George,

Αὐτὸν τὴν ἑσπερίαν καὶ προσηλύτην ὃν τὰ ἑσπερία καλεῖσιν ἀξίαν ἔδου.

*The chiefe and President of warre; the same,
 Whose from Trophis, doth derive his name.*

In S. Georg.

And in another place, λαμπρὸν ἑσπεροφόρον, Illustrious Standard-bearer, for so the word, Tropaeophorus is made to signifie by Geo. Vicelinus, although it should be rendred victorious rather. For thus the title and the adjunct both are ascribed unto him by the said Vicelinus. Hodie (saith he) D. Georgij celebritas apud Græcos præ ceteris perquam est eximia. Appellatur autem eum, μεγαλομαρτυρα καὶ ἑσπεροφόρον, Vexillarium. In reference to which construction, no question but he hath the title of Antesignanus in the Martyrologie of Usuardus, before mentioned; and that of Signifer, in Monke Robert, and Pantaleon, and in Michael ab Yffelt, of which, more hereafter. Which adjunct, that I meane of ἑσπεροφόρος, is a good argument, that our Martyr, is not hee of Alexandria, who was no Souldier, but a Church man.

(3) From publike monuments haue we recourse to private Authors, beginning first with him who wrote the Fasti Siculi, so called, because they were found lurking in an old Sicilian Librarie, and from thence brought unto the light. A worke of good esteeme, and most unquestionable credit. The Author of it, is conceived to be one Peter, Bishop of Alexandria, who lived about the yeere 640. who gives us both the time and story of Saint Ge suffering briefly thus, Εἰς σὺν ἡ εἰς ἑξαυτὸν ἀγαλήφας τὴν κλεινὴν, ἐβλήτο διωσμός χριστιανῶν, καὶ πολλοὶ ἐμάρτυρησαν, ἐν οἷς ἐμάρτυρησεν, καὶ ὁ ἀγιος Γεώργιος, &c. Two hundred fifty and five yeeres after our Saviours Ascention, great persecution was raised against the Christians, wherein many of them, and amongst them Saint

Saint George did suffer Martyrdom. Now to the 255. yeers above mentioned, let us but adde those 34. which our Saviour lived before his Passion and Ascension, and they amount in all unto 289. which is the time allowed by other of our Authors, for S. Georges suffering. Which computation, agreeth with another of the same Author, which placeth it in the third yeere of the 266. Olympiad, which falls exactly into the yeere 289. before specified. In the next place we have Cedrenus, who flourished in the yeere 1070. who tels us in his Compendium Historiarum, that under Diocletian and Maximian the Emperours, μέγας διασμός καὶ χριστιανῶν ἐκκλήση, &c. The Christians were afflicted with a great and tedious persecution, during which fiery times of tryall, many received the crowne of glory, and amongst others, Προκόπιος καὶ Γεώργιος, οἱ αὐτοδύμοι μάρτυρες, Procopius, & George, the so much celebrated Martyrs. To him succedes, in course of time, the famous and most learned Lady, the Lady Anne Comnena; which in the story of her fathers acts, Alexiad. l. 8. speakes also of S. Georges martyrdom, though she saile somewhat in the place, which she supposeth to be Rams in the Holy Land. For speaking of D. Godfreis passage through Ramel, (so she calls it) she addes this presently, ἐν ᾧ ὁ μέγας μάρτυς Γεώργιος μάρτυρ ᾤκησε, where George the honorable & so much honoured Martyr suffered. She lived about the yeere 1120. Next looke we on Nicephorus surnamed Callistus, who wrote about the yeere 1305. Andronicus the elder, then reigning in Constantinople, who being sworn and examined, Hist. Ecclesiast. saith as followeth. Τούτοις δὲ τοῖς χρόνοις καὶ Γεώργιος τὸ μέγα ἥρω, 7. cap. 15. ἀβλῆντι ὄνομα, καὶ τῷ χρόνῳ ᾧ ὑπῆρξεν ὁ καρυαῖος, &c. About “ this time, (saith hee) the time of Dioclesians fury, the so “ much celebrated George, chiefe of the Army of the Mar- “ tyrs, received the fruit and recompence of all his sufferings “ for his Saviour. This in the generall. For the particulars, “ ἐκ Καππαδοκίας βῆ δὲν, νεότης ἔτι, καὶ ἀγαλματίας τῷ ὄντι, &c. “ He was of Cappadocia by his Country, and being yet ex- “ ceeding young, of speciall beauty, and his beard scarce “ budding, did nobly undergoe the paines of martyrdom. “ For being apprehended for inveighing, as he did, against “ their

“their Idols, and scoffing at the irreligion of the Empe“rours: he suffered such extremity of torture, as was almost “above the strength of nature to endure. After they had im“prisoned him, and even cramped his legges with irones;
 “he was first pierced and harrowed, as it were, with the “sharpest nailes. Afterwards, being scorched with burning “lime, and put upon the racke, and all his members seue“rally hackt and hewne with swords; and as it were, worne “out with so many sorts of hideous torments: he still con“tinued constant, and plainly did expresse himselfe to be “of most invincible resolutions. (Then doth hee touch a “little at Glycerius, and the Emperesse Alexandra, both which “he differently relates from Metaphrastes.) And in the end “concludeth, ἐν τῇ αὐτοῦ ἐπελευσίᾳ τῷ ξίφει: that at the “last he was beheaded, and so departed from this life unto “a better. To this Nicephorus, adde we anothers of that name, Nicephorus Gregoras: who obit, and in a glance, doth call
S. George τὸ Χριστὸν μάρτυρα, one of the Martyrs of Christ Je“sus: which is as much as possibly could be said in such a little.

(4) In the next place we meet with Iohn Comnenus, Emperour of Constantinople, Anno 1348. or thereabouts;
 during the nonage of the children of Andronicus the younger. who in his 4. Booke against Mabomet, bringeth in S.
George as a most notable example of the Christian faith, as followeth, Ο παρ' ἡμῶν τῶν Χριστιανῶν τιμωμένῳ μάρτυρι Χριστὸν “Γεώργιον, &c. Saint George the Martyr, so much honou“red by us Christians, was by the wicked and Idolatrous, “exceedingly tormented; that so hee might be brought a“bout, both to abjure his Christ, and adore their Idole, “but hee chose rather to indure innumerable deaths and “tortures, for the sake of Christ, then renounce his faith;
 “and for that cause was put upon a full variety of racks and “torments. At last hee said unto the Tyrant, ἀπελθόντες “ἰδοῦμεν τὰ θεῶς υμῶν, &c. Come, said hee, let us look upon “your gods: Which when the Tyrant heard, he did excec“dingly rejoyce, supposing that he meant to sacrifice unto “their Idols. Being now come unto the Temple, accom“panied with great multitudes of people; the Martyr went unto the Altar, and lifting up his voice, tell me, said hee, ye Idole, in the name of Iesus Christ, who is the true God:

“un-

 and they answered, Christ the sonne of God, and God the Father. The Martyr thereupon commanded them in the name of Christ, to fall downe before him: and presently they fell downe, and were broke in pieces. Which, when the multitude had seene, they cryed out, saying, μεγαλη η πισις τῆς χριστιανῶν, μέγας ὁ θεὸς Γεωργίου: great is the Christians Faith, great is the God of George. So hee:
 which is in substance and effect, the History of our blessed Martyr, according unto Metaphrastes, though it faile in circumstance. With more particulars, Maximus Bishop of Cythera (wee now call it Cerigo) In a Booke by him published in the vulgar Greeke, inscribed, Βίαι τῶν ἁγίων, or the Legend of the Saints: doth thus report it.

Ὁ ἐνδοξος, καὶ θαυμαστός καὶ μέγας μάρτυς Γεώργιος, ἦτον εἰς τοῦ καιροῦ τοῦ βασιλέως Διοκλητιανοῦ, ἀπὸ τῆς Καππαδοκίας, ἀπὸ γυναικὸς λαμ-πρῆς, τῆς πόλεως τῆς στρατοῦ τῆς τελευτῶν: ἦτον δὲ κόμης εἰς τὸ ἀξιωμα. And in the end, ὁ μὲν ἁγίος ἀπικεφαλίδην: Which is the same in purpose, and almost in words, with that before recited from the Anthologion; save that the language is more modetne. More neere to Metaphrastes comes *Damasce*n the Monke, in his Thesaurus; who thus hath it.
 Εἰς τὸν ἐκείνον καιρὸν ἦτον ὁ μεγαλομάρτυς Γεώργιος τῆς τῆς ἡλικί-ας ὡς εἴκοσι χρόνων εὐφυῆς ἀπὸ τοῦ γυναικὸς καὶ πλούσιος πατρὸς, &c.
 Ταῦτα δὲ πατεῖται ἡμεῖς ἀπὸ Καππαδοκίας, &c. About these times,
 (those of Diocletian) flourished the honorable Martyr George a young man, of about the age of 20. yeeres: of Noble parentage, and rich, his Country Cappadocia. His father being dead in the Faith of Christ, his mother travailing into Palestine, her native Country, ἐκεῖ δὲ ἔχει τὰ πλείω κτήματα, for she had great possessions there. Thus doth he prosecute the story, as Metaphrastes did before, but with farre more brevity; and in the end concluded also, that after many torments valiantly suffred, διεσπώσθη ἀπεκεφαλίσθη τὸν, he was beheaded by the Souldiers: What *Damasce*ne this was, and when he lived, I am not certaine.

Hee

Hee calls himselfe Stoudites; and wrot, as I conjecture by his phrase, in the corrupted times of the Greeke language.

(5) Proceede we next unto the Poets; and of that ranke, not to say any thing of Euchaites before mentioned; we will take onely Callicles and Philes, both of them living in the declining age of the Greeke elegancies. That of the former, is fathered commonly on Theodorus Prodrromus, amongst whose Epigrams it is extant, and unto him ascribed by Vicelius and Serrarius, but by neither rightly; as by the title it appeares, had they lookt upon it. The Author lived about the times of the Lady Anna Comnena, daughter unto Alexius the Greeke Emperour, of whom wee spake before; his evidence and Epigramme on S: Georges portraiture, and is as followeth.

Εἰς τὸ ἄγιον Γεώργιον ἐν λαοκῷ λίθῳ τυπωθέντα.

Παῖς Ἀβραάμ ὁ μάρτυς ὅς ἐκ λίδων
Πιλῷ εἰ * πρὸ σαρκὸς εἶχεν ἡρωδραμῆον
Εχθρον ὄντα τῷ λαῷ καὶ ἐν ἐρεῇ Μαρτυρικοῖς * ὑδρῶσι ἐκτεταμένον.

* Lege εἰ πρὸ

* Lege potius δρῶσιν.

Εἰς τὸ αὐτόν!

Φθάνη γαργεῖν εἰς ἑκατὸν ἢ πέντε
Οὐ σάχω, ἀθλητῶν δὲ τὸν χροστὸν σάχω.
Μη τιῶν ἀερμῶν εἶχεν ἢ πέντε δρῶσιν,
Δὲ ἥς ὁ μάρτυς ἐκφυεῖς ἀετρεδρη;

Υρον

Vpon the portraiture of Saint George, in white Marble.

*Out of the stones did God to Abraham give
This Martyr, for a sonne : when he did live,
His flesh was red, like ours ; now white become,
Washt in the sweate of his owne Martyrdome.*

Another on the same.

*This Stony ground brings forth an hundred fold;
The care a Champion fount, an care of Gold.
Was not this Rocke with dew of Hermon fed,
And the great Martyr thereby nourished;*

Which his conceits, as others of that nature, are all built upon realities ; must needs suppose S. George to have had existence : and not to be a man onely, but a Saint.

(6) In the last place comes Philes, a versifier of the same kind ; who flourished in the yeere 1260. under Michael Palaeologus. This Author hath comprised in twenty two Tetrastikes, the whole history of our Martyr ; according unto Metaphrastes and the tradition of those Churches : communicated to mee by Master Patrick Young, his Majesties Librarie-keeper, out of an old Manuscript, brought by Sir Thomas Roe, from Turkie. Out of the twenty two I have made choise of foure onely, for the present business : such as confirme unto us, his birth, and Country ; the Emperours, under which he suffered ; his apprehension, or imprisonment, and his execution.

Elc

Εἰς τὴν ἁγίαν τὴν ἀγίαν Γεωργίαν.

Πολλὰς ἀρχαίς μαρτυρικὰς ἀστέρας
Καταπαυκῶν γῆ τῇ Θεῷ ᾧ μὲν πύρων.

* Λογὴ ἀλλ' ἀ-σερᾶρχῳ.

* Ἀλλὰ σεράρχῳ τὸν Γεώργιον φερεῖς
Θυ γῆ τὸ λοιπὸν, ἔρωθ' δ' ἔφρις μέρας.

Several faulty

Εἰς τὸ ἅγιον ἱερὸν Διοκλητιανῶ ἐν ἑτέροις δ' βασιλείων χρυσόμορον:

Ἐμῖς δὲ βασιλεὺς Κεῖσοι πάθῃ,
Γεωργίαν πάθῃ διὰ πέν τιμητοῦς.
Καὶ τῆτο γὰρ τὸ ῥῆμα τῆς διδασκαλίας,
Ὁ πῶς, ἔργα ᾧ ἡμῶν μείζω δρᾶσι.

Εἰς τὴν φυλακίῳ τῇ ἀγίῳ:

Τινὶ ξυμείρεις τὸν Γεώργιον ὅπως
Τύραντι πικρῇ, κηλαδῶν διακρύβῃ;
Γελῶ τὸ ἱερὸν σέλημα· πῶς γὰρ ἐκφύγῃ;
Ὅς αὐτοκτονῆς τοῖς βασιλεῦσι προσβέχει.

Εἰς τὸ διαξίφρις τελεῖσθαι.

Τῇ σαρκὶ πῶς τὸν Θεὸν σε δοξάσεις
Κύδῃσε μάργος, δούρος ἐν διωχέῃ
Δόξασον αὐτὸν ἐκπαθῆναι· εἰς ξίφῃ
Καὶ παύσῃ ὅτε, τοῖς πυράτοις τὸν πόνο;

On

On the Nativity of Saint
George.

*Many a Starre-like Martyr, hast thou given O Cappadocia, to the God of heaven.
But this bright Starre, Saint George, no longer thou Shalt beare; the highest Heaven confines him now;*

Vpon Saint George, condemned by Diocletian and foure other Kings.

*In our Redeemers death, two Kings agreed;
But * five, Saint Georges suffering have decreed:
For so their master, saying, did divine,
The faithfull shall doe greater works then mine.*

He meanes
Magentius for the 5.

On the imprisonment of the Martyr.

*What arts these Tyrants use, to locke up fast,
This blessed Saint; lest hee should scape at last,
Dull fooles; could you imagine he would flie,
That made a proffer of himselfe to die?*

On the beheading of the Martyr.

*Throughout all thy body, great Saint George, thou hast Suffred for Gods deere glory: now at last Suffer thy trunklesse head his praise to shew;
And end the Tyrants labours at a blow.*

So farre the Greeke writers, according to their times and ages, have testified unto the world what they conceive of our blessed Martyr. The testimony of those Churches, we shall see hereafter.

O

(7) And

(7) And now at last we come unto the Protestant Divines, from whom we justly may expect but little favour, considering what leading men already have declared against us. Yet is S. George so confident of the exceeding truth and justice of his cause; that hee despaires not to finde friends, even amongst them. And first Ithyricus, the founder of the Stiffe or Rigid Lutherans, as they use to call them; and a chiefe Author of that Ecclesiasticall History, which wee call the Centuries; composed by him and other famous men of the City of Magdeburgh, in Saxony, is fully for us. For in the fourth Century, and third Chapter, which is de Persecutione, Saint George is reckoned among other Martyrs of that time, out of Fasciculus temporum; and in the 12. Chapter of the same Century, entituled De Martyribus; more copiously thus. Celebris inter Martyres ejus temporis, etiam Georgius fuit, natione Cappadox; adolescens in demonas gentilium acriter invehitus erat, &c. as it followeth in Nicephorus, whose words and testimony is there cyted. A prooffe, as I conceive it, not to bee questioned: considering, what bitter enemies the Authors of this History, doe alwayes shew themselves, against the superstitions of Rome; how greedily they take occasion, as much as possibly they can, to advance their owne cause, and cry down the Papist. What now, if to the Father of the Stiffe and Peremptory Lutherans; I should here adde Melancthon, the founder, as they call him, of the moderate, or Lutherans molles? Sure if I did, I should not mis-report him, either in his words or meaning. For when hee tells us, in the place before examined, that the Papists make Saint Anne the Patronesse of Riches, Saint George the God of Souldiers, and Sebastian a defence against the Plague; Ut nempe Georgius tueatur Equites, Sebastianus Pestem arceat, &c. He doth without all controversie, affirme S. George to be a S. no lesse than either S. Sebastian, or S. Anne, which neither Calvin, nor any one since him, have ever questioned. To draw unto an end, take here the testimony of Oramus, in his Nomenclator; a Lutheran perhaps, but sure I am, no Papist: who rightly hath distinguished thole three Georges, which the so famous Doctore, Reynolds and Drusius us have confounded. We read it thus: Georgius Episcopus Laodiceus, Arianus, secul. 4. Georgius Alexandrinus heret. Arian. Anno 356. and lastly, Georgius Cappadox & Martyr, 289.

P. Par. l. c. 3
Scil. 3

(8) But not to search further, and for more particulars, we have a testimony wherein all those of the Lutheran party, are included jointly, I meane the Confession of Saxonie, drawne up by the most learned and judicious Divines of the age and Country to bee presented to the Fathers of the Trent. Council, Anno 1551. Subscribed amongst others, by that Phoenix of his time Melanchthon, Geo. Major, Erasmus, Sacerius, Alex. Alesius, Ioach. Camerarius and Eberius: ratified and allowed as theirs, with the consent and approbation of their severall Churches, by the Marquesses of Brandenburg, the Dukes of Pomerland, the Counts of Mansfeld, and the Imperiall Towne of Strasbourg. There in the 22. Chapter amongst other great abuses, which are observed to follow on the invocation of the Saints departed; this is accounted to be one: that men repaire to certaine Images of the Saints, for certaine benefits, invoking George for Mars, and Anne for Inno, & sic de ceteris. Postea ex talibus vitiis quanti furores sequuntur, saith the Confession. Concursus ad certas statuas. &c. Ab Anna petuntur divitie, ut a Innono; a Georgio, ut a Marte, Victoria, a Sebastiano & Rocho pestilentie depulsio, &c. And in a former Section, this amongst other arguments is alledged against such invocation, that no man is assured by any evidence from scripture, that those departed heare our prayers, or are of counsell with our wants. And thereupon it followeth, qualis ergo est hac precatio, hoc modo accedere ad Annam aut ad Georgium, invoco sed dubio tua intercessio mihi prodest, an mihi opem ferre possit. From whence we justly may conclude, that those of Saxonie, and of the Lutheran Confession, esteeme S. George to be a Saint: no lesse then S. Sebastian, or S. Anthony, or S. Anne; concerning which there hath no doubt been made in this curious age. Only they seeme offended, that Saint George should be invoked, either in generall as a Saint, or in particular, as the Mars or Saint of Souldiers: which doth not prejudice our cause, but promote it rather. To bring this testimony home, and beyond all cavill, let us consult the title of this two and twentieth chapter, and we finde it thus: de invocatione piorum hominum qui ex hac vita discesserunt; touching the invocation of those holy men that are departed; which is sufficient both against Calvin, and Dr. Reynolds, the two divided Patrons of the contrary opinions against Saint George. For by this passage, the Lutherans doe conclude Saint George to be a man, which is quite contrary to Calvin: and not so onely, but a Saint, an holy man, which crosseth that of Doctor Reynolds.

(9) Yea, but the Lutherans say, they of Calvins partie, are but a kinde of semi-Papists, and image-worshippers at the least, if not idolaters: neither their Churches to bee reckoned as reformed, nor the men as Orthodoxe. Let us then next adventure amongst those, which heape those attributes upon themselves, which they deny unto the others. And first we have Hospinian, as great a Clerke as almost any of those countries. Who in his booke, entituled de origine imaginum, not disallowing of the Saint, condemnes his image onely, qua eques cataphractus pugnat; and that they doe invoke him in stead of Mars: the same with those of Saxony before mentioned. But more particularly and expressly, he gives us the full storie of our Martyr, in his booke de festis, thus as followeth. Georgius natione Cappadox, tribunus militum factus, in idola et demonas gentiliū acriter invehens fuit. Captus igitur sub Dioclesiano Cesare, à Daciano Praside in vincula conjicitur, &c. Saint George a Cappadocian by his country, and by place, a Tribune of the Souldiers, inveighed most bitterly against the Idols of the Gentiles. For which cause, being apprehended under Dioclesian, he was by Dacianus, President or Lievetenant to the Emperour, first cast in prison, afterwards torne with piercing nayles, scorched with hot lime, put on the racke, and hacked with swords, and in fine, beheaded. Yet notwithstanding all these torments, he never seemed dejected or out of heart, but bare up bravely till the last. So farre Hospinian. Which the invincible constancie of our blessed Martyr, tyr, he makes to be the ground-werke of that fiction in Lacobi de Voragine, touching the killing of the Dragon, as before we noted. Now unto this Helvetian, wee will next adde Danaus a Genevian, a great admirer both of Calvins person, and of his doctrine, as he expresseth it in his Epistle prefixed before his Comment on Saint Austin de heresi- cap. 77. bus. In that discourse of his, he reckoneth up the severall sorts of Christians in the Easterne Churches, and in particular tels us of the Georgians, that they were so denominated of Saint George, whose image they doe carry with them in all their battailes. Georgiani a B. Georgio [nomen sumunt] cuius imaginem in praelijs et vexillis semper ferunt: what doe I heare Danaus say? A B. Georgio? then certainly if hee bee Beatus, as he styles him, he neither is non homo, nor an Arian hereticke: and more then this wee could not looke for from our greatest friend.

(10) But our next testimony will, I know be, worthy our having, viz. the iudgement and assent of Master Foxe, in his Acts and Monuments: sufficient of it selfe to stop all their mouthes, who now declare against our Martyr. Hec con- Edit. R. Day.
Anno 1596.
 " firmes us thus: To conclude, many in severall places c-p. 75.
 " very where were martyred, whose names the booke entitled fasciculus temporum, declareth: as viz. Victorians,
 " &c. Pantaleon, Georgius, Iustus, and others more, to an infinite number, suffered Martyrdome in this persecution;
 " whose names the Lord hath written in the booke of life. If so, of George amongst the rest, be written in the booke of life, he had once abeing, and is not now amongst the damned. Now lest it should be said that this George here mentioned, is not he of Cappadocia, let the same Author tell the storie of him more at large, with this following preamble.
 " Now it remaines to gather up the names and stories of " certaine particular Martyrs, worthy of speciall memory pag. 79.
 " for their singular constancie and fortitude shewne in their " sufferings and cruell torments. The names of all which " suffered in this foresaid persecution, being in number infinite, in vertue most excellent, it is impossible here to comprehend: but the most notable, and in most approved

Pag 83.

“ Author expressed, we thought here to insert, for the more “ edification of other Christians, which may and ought to “ looke upon their examples. So farre in generall to manifest his intent and purpose, in making choyce of the most notable Martyrs, and such as are expressed in the best Authors. Then he proceeds particularly. To these may bee joyned also Georgius, a young man of Cappadocia, who stoutly inveighing against the impious idolatrie of the Emperours, was apprehended, and cast in prison, there torne with hooked irons, burnt with hot lime, and stretched with cords, and after that, his hands and feet with other members of his body, being cut off, at last with a sword he was beheaded. A testimony not to be denyed, without a dangerous consequence, which must needs follow thereupon. For if that Master Foxe may be so deserted, where he speaks out of approved Authors, as he saith himselfe; how just occasion may we give unto the Papists, to question many of those Martyrs, whose sufferings he hath there recorded, and of the which (say they) himselfe is both the writer and the witness.

(11) Thus, in almost all ages, and from some of all the Churches, the Greeke, the Protestant, and the Roman; have we found Advocates and Patrons in Saint Georgius cause; not glancing at it on the by, or circumque aliud agites, as if they were afraid to touch upon the string; but positively, and by way of history and plaine narration. And verily it were a matter of no difficultie, to make an equall Catalogue of such as in all times, in the same times, wherein these very Authors lived, whose countenance we have herein used, have to the life expressed the tyrannies, the impious and inhumane misdemeanours of George of Alexandria. For not to speake of Naxianus, and Artemasius, who are copious in it, nor of Saint Gregory of Nyssa, who toucheth it in transitu, and on the by; nor yet of Socrates, Socranus, and Theodoret the historians, who plentifully have described his life and cruelties: not to speake anything of those, tell me, if almost any of all those which have been studious to recount the acts and monuments of the Church, have spared to brand brand him? Tell me if any which have writ the life of Athanasius, if Photius, who speaks of Athanasius onely as a learned Author, if those which treat of the affaires of Alexandria, if any of them leave him without some stain, whereby his memory was made odious, and the man abhorred? which being so, as so it is, it were a miracle to mee, that in the Church he should be honoured as a Saint, and that with such a general agreement of all sides and parties: and yet the learned men, men of most eminence in the Church, should brand him for an hereticke, for a bloudie tyrant. I must confesse, I am not Oedipus enough for such a Sphinx: and but to proceed a little further, we shall easily finde, that many of those Authors which have in honourable termes delivered us the historie of Saint George the Martyr, have in termes vile enough, expressed the cruelties of George the tyrant. And to beginne with Metaphrastes, whom wee have chosen to speake first for us, and who most largely hath described the life and passion of Saint George: what testimony doth he give of George the Arian? Surely the best he saith is In vita Athana. this, that being made Bishop to despight the Alexandrians, fi. & not so much as making any shew of godlinesse: he bent himselfe so much to cruell and tyrannicall courses, that he appeared more like a civill Magistrate, with his rodde and axes, then a Priest or Prelate. Ο δὲ Γεώργιος καὶ τῶν Ἀλεξανδρίων ὑπερφανὸς ἀνδρὶς, ὃς δὴ ἡμίματ' ἐπαίχεν ἑαυτὸν, ἐξυλλασσάμενος πάντας τοὺς ὁμολογῆτας, ὡς δακτύλιον αὐτὸν ἐδεύει καὶ στέλνει τὴν ἡμιονίαν διάγειν, ἢ ἱεροσωμῆς περὶ ταύτου. as my Author hath it. So Geo. Cedrenus, who out of Nazianzene, calls him of Alexandria, τίς ἐστι Καππαδοκίων, a Cappadocian Monster, and doth accordingly describe him: honours our Martyr with the title of ἀνιδίμητος ὁ μάρτυς, the much celebrated Martyr, as we have shewn already in the third Section of this Chapter: as also with the stile of καλλινίκος ὁ μάρτυς, the victorious Martyr, as we shall finde anon in our eighth Chapter. And so Nicephorus, who stiles Saint George, ὁ ἡγεστὸς τῶν ἁγίων τὸν κορυφαῖον, the chiefe or Captaine of the holy Martyrs: hath heaped at once, on George the Arian, whatsoever ill, Socrates, Sozomen, and Theodoret, have reported of him severally. So ~~the~~ the Protestants, the Magdeburgians, who stile our Martyr, celebrem inter Martyres ejus temporis, of great renowne amongst the Martyrs of that age; call George the Arian, hominem flagitiosissimum, a most wicked fellow: not to say any thing of Oramus, who calls the one hereticum, and the other, Martyrem. And lastly, for the Writers of the Latine Churches, Vincenius tells us, that after Constans the young Emperour was made away, who had before protected Athanasius, the Arians prevailed with Constantius to remove him, and settle George, a man both cruell and perfidious in his place. Rursus in Athanasium veteres illi inicentores principis odia resuscitare ceperunt, fugatoque de ecclesia in locum ejus Gregorium quendam (mistaken in the print for Georgium) perfidie et immanitatis sue socium mittunt. The same repeated by Antoninus, another of our Authots, who rightly hath it Georgium, and not Gregorium. Sufficient evidence, were there no other, to prove our George a different man from him of Alexandria.

Tom. 2. cap. 4.
lib. 9. sect. 2.

(12) To summe up all, we have here prooffe sufficient, that George the Martyr, was by birth, of Cappadocia: the thing affirmed to be so, by Vincenius, Antoninus, de Voragine, Hermannus Schedel, Bergomensis, and Volaterran, amongst the Latines, by Metaphrastes, that attributed to Pascrates, the Anthologion and Menologic, Philes, Nicephorus, Maximus, and Damascene, amongst those of Greece; and by Illyricus, Oramus, Hospinian, and Mallet Foxe, amongst the Protestants. By most of which it is resolved also that he was a Souldier; and generally by those of Greece agreed upon both for his age and honourable ranke, and noble parentage. His suffering, for the time of it, generally is reported under Diocletian, as the chiefe persecutor, in termes expresse by Metaphrastes, Pascrates, Cedrenius, de Voragine, Volaterran, Maximus, Damascene, Hospinian, Philes, and the publike monuments of the Easterne Churches: implicitly, and in ordinary count of time, by the Fasti Siculi, by Nicephorus, Wernerus, Sabellicus, Hermannus, Schedel, Bergomensis, the Magdeburgians, Foxe, Oramus:
and

and under Dacianus, or Galerius rather as a chiefe instrument of Diocletians cruelty; by Bede, Rabanus Maurus, Notgerus, Vincentius, de Voragine, Antoninus and Hospinian. The yeere thereof limited more particularly by de Voragine ad Ann 287. by the fasciculus temporum, ad Ann 291. and by the Fasti Siculi, and Oraus, to the yeere 289. and by Baronius, betwixt both, who in his notes upon the Calender, hath placed it, Anno 290. a difference not observable. The day thereof assigned, upon the 23. of Aprill, by Venerable Bede, Paschrates, Rabanus, Vsuardus, and Notgerus; as also by Vincentius, Antoninus, and Hospinian; and by the Martyrologies both Greeke and Latine, and other monuments of the Church. The manner of his death being affirmed also by the losing of his head, by Metaphrastes, Bede, Paschrates, Rabanus, and Notgerus, Vincentius, de Voragine, Nicephorus, Antoninus, Schedell, and Bergomensis, by Maximus, Philes, Damascene, the Anthologion and Meno-logies, Hospinian, and Master Foxe: authorities above all deniall. Put this together, and it will amount to this, that George a young man of Cappadocia, a Souldier by profession, one of Noble parentage, great fortunes, and of an honourable ranke, upon the 23. of Aprill, Anno 289. ~~or thereabouts~~, suffered a glorious martyrdome at Nicomedia, by losing of his head: the Emperour Diocletian being then principall in state, and Dacianus or Galerius the Dacian, a chiefe instrument of the Princes cruelty. Which circumstances are, I trow, sufficient in themselves to make our blessed Martyr a distinct person from their George of Alexandria, to whom not one of them agrees: hee being of Cicilia, well in yeeres, a Caterer of Hogges flesh, a poore Fullers brat, a fugitive, a bloody tyrant, clad in the title of a Bishop, and at last torne in pieces by a violent and unruly multitude, at Alexandria, for his many villanies, Anno 362. Julian the Apostata, one like himselfe, being then the Emperour: and which is most of all, branded, not onely by the Fathers and Historians of those times; but by those very Authors who write the story of our Martyr, and speake not of him, but in very honourable termes. If any of our adver-

Lib. II. cap. 4.

adversaries can reconcile these differences, they shall gaine the cause. Which being so, wee may the better, and with more justice, apply the old complaint of Camus, unto the businesse now in hand, Si namque in duorum ore vel trium firmissimum fiat omne verbum, ear adversus hanc legem, plurimis testibus rem eandem olim gestam contestantibus, fidem Theologus abnegabit? Since God (saith he) hath told us, that out of the mouth of two or three witnesses, every word shall be established, with what pretence of reason may a Divine oppose this Law, and not giue credit unto many witnesses, affirming altogether the same Historie. For our parts, so confident are we that our case is just and true, that if the adversaries of Saint George are able to produce one single testimony, out of any antient Author, or out of any Author before the hint was given by Calvin, to make good their affirmavit: we will forsake our colours, and revel to them. But I am bold to say, they cannot: for had the thing beene possible, no doubt but Doct. Reynolds, who spared no labor in the search, would have produced it. And verily it must needs bee strange, if now we should begin on no better grounds then the affirmation of one man, or the conjecturals of another, either to account Saint George a counterfeit, a larva, whom for the space of thirteene hundred and forty yeeres, the Church hath honoured as a Saint of speciall eminencie: or else confound him with a man, whom for the space of almost 1300. yeeres, both Churches haue condemned as a wretched hereticke, a damnable and bloody tyrant, so different from one another in all circumstances of time, place, dignitie, and all other circumstances whatsoever, the bare name excepted. If any shall object, that if he were a Cappadocian, so famous, and so antient, as we say he was; how is it then, that Basil, Nazianzen, and Nysse, Cappadocians all, and all Panegyristes, make no mention of him in their writings and orations: we answer unto this, that Martyrs were there honoured, where they suffered, and where or when their bodies were interred, and their memorials celebrated: and that wher they were honoured, there commonly were Panegyricks made of them for their greater honour.

honour. George therefore not suffering, nor being buried in his own country, had not his anniuersarie there celebrated, but in other places, afterwards made famous by him: which was the case of other Martyrs: For an example of the which, take we Saint Peter, and Saint Andrew, two of the Apostles, who being natives of Iudea, and one of them Bishop of Antiochia, are not commemorated in those parts where they were borne, and sometime lived: but one of them at Rome, the other at Patras in Achaia, where they did suffer death, and where their bodies were interred.

CHAP.

CHAP. V.

(1) Four severall wayes used by the Church, to keepe alive the memory of the Martyrs. (2) The way of Martyrologies, how ancient. (3) The Roman Martyrologie: and what it testifieth of St. George. (4) The nature of the Greeke Menologies, and what they wnesse of our Martyr. (5) Commemoration of the Dead, how used in the Church Primistive (6) Commemoration of S. George, in the time of Gregorie the Great. (7) The depravation of the ancient use of it in the Church of Rome (8) The publique service of that Church on Saint Georges day. (9) Arguments drawne from the Church service, of what validity. (10) The service for Saint Georges day in the Church of Greece: (11) As also in the Greeke Church in Hierusalem; and in those of Æthiopia. (12) St. Georges day when made a festivall, and by whom.

(1)

Thus have we drawne together the suffrages of such which either positively haue affirmed, or Historically related anything of Saint George the Martyr. In which we finde sufficient prooffe, as of his Country, so of the time and day, and manner of his death: and that so punctually, so agreeably both to their fore-man and themselves, that never any lurie agreed better on a Verdict. This done, wee now addresse our selves to make enquiry of the Church, ἡ στήλη καὶ ἡ ἀσπίς αἱ ἀληθείαι, The pillar & the ground of Truth, as Saint Paul calls it: to learne of her, what she hath practically done in Saint Georges honour. For, to the positive affirmations of some men in Saint Georges cause, and the historical relations of some others; if wee can also get the countenance and practise of the Church: wee then may have have some good assurance, that no man will hereafter stirre against us. Now in the practise of the Church, we may observe foure wayes or courses, whereby she hath continually endeavoured to keepe alive the memory of the blessed Martyrs: in none of which she hath beene wanting (such is her tender care and respect of him) unto our Saint George. The first of these, is the common Martyrology, or Calendar; in which their Names and Passion, briefly, but unto all eternitie, are registred. The second is, by giving them some speciall place in her publicke Liturgies. The third, by recollecting up their Reliques, & laying them with all due honor, in some place fit for them. And last of all, the calling of such Temples by the names of these most blessed Spirits; which she had solemnely erected to Gods speciall service, and consecrated to his honour. How much the Church hath done in all and every one of these, to keepe the memory of Saint George the Martyr, alive and flourishing; wee shall best see by taking of them, every one in their severall Order, and speaking of them in particulars.

(2) Beginning with the first, wee finde it on Record in Tully, that in the very first beginnings of the Roman State, it was the office of the chiefe Priest, or Pontifex Max. to keepe a Register of all publicke occurrences, and to preserve them in some tables openly, that so the people might peruse them. Ab initio rerum Rom. (saith hee) usque ad Publ. Mutium Pont. Max. res omnes singulorum annorum mandabat literis Pontifex Max. efferebatque in album, proponebatque tabulam domi, potestas ut esset populo cognoscendi. Which office discontinued in the time of Publ. Mutius, was afterwards revived by Julius Cesar, in his first Consulship, being at that time chiefe Bishop of the Romans. An institution of especiall use and service in that state, as also in all others: there being not a greater spurre to vertue, and heroick undertakings; than an assurance, that the fame of our atchievements and well-deserving, shall not be buried in the same grave with us, and perish with our bodies. For certainly the care both to live vertuously; and (if occasion so require) to dye nobly, must needs bee much augmented mented in the minds of good and honest men : when once they know, that their performings shall not be folded up in silence ; but openly presented to the eyes and ears of all the people. Vpon which grounds, it was the custome of the faithfull, in the first times ; and especially of those which were for place and power most eminent amongst them, to commit to publike memory, the sufferings of all them, which had confessed the Faith of Christ in the midst of tortures ; and continued constant in it even unto the death. Not that they thought, to adde thereby unto their glories, who now were glorious in the Heavens ; but by preserving in continuall remembrance, their infinite indurances, for the truth and testimony of Religion ; to make the remnant of Gods people, yet alive, more apt to runne that course ; and so to run it, that at the last they might attaine an equall guerdon. Of which kind of memoriall or publike Register, is the Epistle of the Church of Smyrna, extant in the fourth Booke of Eusebius History ; that of the Lugdunenses and Viennois, in the fifth ; and lastly, that also of Dionysius Bishop of Alexandria, in the sixth and seven of the same Author.

De Oratore l. 2

(3) Of this kind specially, I meane in reference to the Westerne Churches is the Roman Martyrologie : the first originall of which, not to looke further, and perhapsare worse, may be referred most probably unto Anterus, Bishop of Rome, about the yeere 238. at what time Maximianus, having first killed his Master Alex. Severus, made havocke of the Church of God. Of him it is recorded, that he first caused the Acts and Passions of the blessed Martyrs to be diligently sought out ; and being found, carelully, and at large, to bee enrolled, by the publicke Notaries, in the common Registers of the Church : lest else their memory might be determined with their lives. Anterus, primus statuit (saith Platina) ut res gesta Martyrum diligenter exquisita à notariis scriberentur : conscriptas recondi in arario Ecclesie mandavit ; ne una cum vita, bene agentium memoria aboleretur. Out of which Acts at large, as the Roman Martyrology, now extant, was questionlesse abridged and drawne : So we can can ill affirme for certaine, by whom the whole structure, as we now see it, was raised and perfected. Onely we find in one of Gregories Epistles, that then the Roman Church had upon Register, the names almost of all the Martyrs, and a memoriall of their sufferings; digested as the Martyrologies now are, according to their proper daies; the time onely of their Passions, and the place thereof assigned in them; but little of the circumstance, and manner of their deaths, Nos pene omnium Martyrum, distinctis per dies singulas Passionibus, collecta in uno codice nomina habemus, &c. Non tamen eodem volumine, quis qualiter sit passus indicatur, sed tantum dies & locus Passionis ponitur. Which Booke or Register here spoke of, as it hath much resemblance in the forme and substance of it, with the Roman Martyrology now being; so we may happily resolve, that it is the same, augmented only in the addition of such Saints, as in the times succeeding have had place, (and some of them unworthily) in the common Calendar. This Martyrology, thus ancient, as it may be well supposed, upon the 23. day of April, gives us this testimony of our Martyr, viz. Natalis S. Georgii Martyris, cujus illustre martyrium Ecclesia Dei veneratur. The Passion of Saint George the Martyr, (for so Natalis, must be rendred in the construction of the Church) whose blessed martyrdom is in the Church of God, in especiall honour. And this briefly & in a word, according to the use & nature of a Martyrology: unto which ranke of testimonies wee might have added those which before we cited, from venerable Beda, Oswardus, Robannus Maurus, and Notgerus; all Authors, in their times, of severall Martyrologies. Onely their writings were accounted as the works of private persons onely: not as the publicke monuments and records of holy Church.

(4) Of a farre different nature, are the Greeke Menologies; compounded of the Martyrology, the Breviary and the Missall mixt together. They are a digest of the service of that Church, peculiar to each severall Saint, whose memories are there recorded; some branches of the story being intermingled with their readings: and this divided into twelve.

twelve parts, to each month one, accordingly as Syrinus hath digested the lives and actions of the Saints. Those of the Church of Rome, which I have met with hitherto, shew themselves little conversant in the Greeke records; and as in many other things, so in those also amongst other which concerne our Martyr: which they report differently from one another, and none exactly with the text. Baronius in his notes upon the Martyrology, April 23. tells us this. Græci item in Menologio his verbis: Memoria Sancti & gloriosi, & magni Martyris Georgii, cognomento Tropæophori (he mistakes the word for Tropæophori.) Fuit genere Cappadox, passus sub Diocletiano. So the Cardinall. Its true indeed, that this for substance, is reported in the Greeke Menologies: but when hee tells us, that it is there delivered in his verbis, shewes that in truth he had not scene them. To make good therefore that, which he undertooke to verifie from the Greeke Menologie: the Greeke Menology it selfe, for the month of April, Βιβλίον τῶ Ἀπριλίου μηνός, as the Booke is called, shall bee produced; It informes us thus. τῇ αὐτῇ καὶ κυ μνήμην τῆς αἰγῆς, ἐν δόξῃ, μεγαλομάρτυρος καὶ ἑσπεροφόρου Γεωργίου. Vpon the 23. of the same month (April) is celebrated the memoriall of the holy, famous, and honourable Martyr George called Tropæophorus. Then followeth the service destinate unto the festiual. And in the close thereof, Ο ἱεὺς καὶ θαυμαστός, μέγας μάρτυς Γεώργιος καὶ τῶ χρίστος ἦν Διοκλητιανῆ τῷ βασιλέως, ἐν χρίσθι καὶ Καππαδοκῶν, ἡμῶν ἀποστόμῃ, &c. This famous, admirable and right honourable Martyr George, lived in the times of Diocletian the Emperour: a Cappadocian by his Country, and of noble parentage; first ranked amongst the Tribunes, and then afterwards advanced, unto the dignity of a Count Imperiall. The residue of the story is too long, to be here repeated. Wee had the same before in the Anthologion, which is an abstract or abbreviate of the whole Menologies. This is enough to testify, how the Greeke Church agrees in this particular, with the Westerne churches.

(5) The second way or course, whereby the Church in in ancient times, endeavoured to preserve alive, the memory of the blessed Saints and Martyrs; is, as before we said, by giving them some speciall place in her publicke Liturgies. For since that Christ hath not beene onely manifested great in himselfe, but great also and glorious in his Saints; the dayes of whose departure are to the Church of Christ, as are the inauguration dayes of Kings and Emperours, unto their people: therefore especiall choice being first had of them, there were some certaine times annually selected, to mediate upon our Saviour glorified in them, together with a forme of praise & prayer, answerable to those times. In both which circumstances, both that of time, selected for this service, & of the service destinate unto the time: the Church proceeded with exceeding tendernesse of care, and soundnesse of advice. That so for every purpose, there might be a time & season: & that the office or devotions of the time, being fitted to it; it might be opus diei in die suo. This was the Commemoration of the Dead, in those pious times in use; before that commendable institution became defiled by superstition, and as it were polluted with Idolatry: Of which we have this testimony of S. Austin: Honora. De civit. Dei. l. mus sancte memorias eorum tanquam Sanctorum hominum Dei, 3. c. 27 quisque ad mortem corporum pro veritate certant. Will you the reason of it? It is (saith hee) that in the times of such solemnity, we may both glorifie our God which hath given such gifts unto men; and by the annuall reviving of their memories, we may the better be excited unto an imitation of their virtues. For so it followeth in the place, Ut ea celebritate Deo vero gratias de eorum victoriis agamus: & nos ad imitationem talium coronarum, eorum memoria renovati- one adhortemur. So then it seemes the Church proposed unto her selfe, in her publicke Commemorations of the Dead, two severall ends: one, that God might bee praised in his Saints; the other, that the noble and pious actions of the Saints, may be a patterne unto us, to learne the better how to serve him in Righteousnesse and Holinesse all the dayes of our lives. For if the life and death of the Saints, is precious in the sight of God: how precious should it bee accounted in the eyes of all Gods people, that both the one and the other should be carefully remembred; especially upon the day and time, most capable of such remembrances? And on the other side, how is it possible that the recitall of their Christian lives and godly deaths, should bee so often sounded in the eares of the more loose and dissolute men: and not provoke them at some time or other to cry out with Balaam, O that I might die the death of the righteous, and that my end might be like his! Iust so, the Trophyes of Miltiades, startled such noble resolutions in Themistocles: and so did Alexander emulate the glories of Achilles, recited in the workes of Homer. For which cause also, and thereby to increase the memory of the Saints departed, with and amongst Gods servants: it was the custome of the Church, besides her publike mention of them in her ordinarie Liturgie; to suffer anniversarie panegyricks to be made in praise of such of them, as had most notably deserved it. Sic & defunctis primum, & futuris dabitur exemplum no Minutius hath it.

P

eyes

(6) This was the first occasion of those severall services, which by the Church were destinate unto severall Saints: wherein her care hath beene as speciall of Saint George, as of any other. For in the Latine Churches, and long before they were defiled with superstition, we had a service proper to the day of this famous Saint, as wee may see by that which is still extant in Saint Gregories Antiphonarium, and in his booke de Sacramentis. Nor is there any thing objected against those writings, worthy consideration. For Coke in his Censura Patrum, excepteth not at all against them: and Ryuet in his Specimen, objecteth onely, that he can finde no mention of them before Micrologus, who lived about the yeece 1070. Both these were published by Pamelius, amongst other the Liturgica ecclesie Latina, Anno 1571. containing in them onely such formes of Anthems, as were sung commonly upon severall festivalls, and such short Collects, as were appointed for the Sacrament, or Communions ministred on those solemnities. Hence the names. In the Antiphonarium we reade it thus: the title this,

Natalis

Natalis S. Georgij, the Anthems are as followeth, Antiph.] *Procrexisti me Deus a conventu malignantium, Allelu, a multitudine operantium iniquitatem, All. the Psalme.] Exaudi deus orationem meam cum deprecor, a timore inimici eripe animam meam domine. the offertorie] Confitebuntur cœli misericordiam tuam domine, & veritatem tuam in ecclesia sanctorum. All. All. the first Versicle] Misericordias tuas in æternum domine cantabo: in generatione & progenie annuntiabo veritatem tuam in ore meo. All. the second Versicle] Quoniam quis in nobis æquabitur domino, aut quis erit similis deo in filijs dei? Deus qui glorificatur in concilio Sanctorum. All. the Ad Compendum, or the (compline) Latabitur iustus in domino, & sperabit in eo; & laudabuntur omnes recti corde. So in the Sacramentary, on the booke de Sacramentis: the title this] Feria 5. ad S. Georgium. the Collect) Deus qui culpa offenderis, penitentia placaris, preces populi precantis propitius respice; & flagella iracundia, quæ pro peccatis nostris meremur, averte, per &c. the private orizon) Sacrificijs præsentibus domine quesumus intende placatus, ut & devotioni nostræ proficiant, et saluti, the Compline) Cœlestis domus benedictione percepta, suppliceste deus omnipotens precamur, ut hoc idem nobis et Sacramenti causa sit, et salutis, per &c. And then the blessing on the people) Parce domine, parce populo tuo, ut dignis flagellationibus castigatus in tua misericordia respiciat. So farre these Formularies. It is true, that in the latter times, the Antiphonarium, and the Missall or Sacramentall, contained in them not a few Anthems onely, used scatteringly here and there in the publike services; nor such Collects as were used in the Communions onely, but the whole service destinate unto the day. But in Saint Gregories time it was no other then we see by these examples. As for this Antiphonarium (not to say any more of that de Sacramentis) a copie of it, pricked with the Muscalle Notes, according to the singing of the Church of Rome, was given by Adrian the Pope, unto Charlemagne: ut juxta eundem cantum Gallicum emendaret, quod et factum est, saith the Monke of Anglesme. Sufficient evidence that it is of great both credit and antiquitie. Adde hereunto the Preface, as they use to call it, made by *Aleuinus

Apud Pamel. in Liturgie.

(hee lived about the yeere 780.) to be said upon the commemoration of our Martyr: which added to that used ordinarily in the Church of God, is this that followeth. Ag-
" quum et iustum est &c. It is very meet, right, and our " bounden duty, that we should at all times, and in all pla" ces, give thanks to thee O Lord, holy Father, Almighty
" and everlasting God, per Iesum Christum Dominum nostrum, pro cuius nominis veneranda confessione, B. Martyr Georgius diversa supplicia sustinuit, et ea devincens perpetuatis
" promeruit coronam: through Iesus Christ our Lord, for the " confession of whose name, the blessed Martyr George su" stained varietie of torments, and vanquishing them all,
" obtained at last the crowne of glory. Sufficient argument that he had his commemoration in the Church of God, and in such times thereof, when superstition had not darkened and overshadowed the light of it.

(7) But in the times succeeding, as the conceits of men wereraised unto a wonderfull admiration both of the Saints and of their vertues, and throughly possessed with this, how neere a place they held in the opinion and esteeme of Almighty God: it was not thought enough to commemorate their graces, unlesse we made some further use of their esteeme with their Creator, in gracing our petitions. The rather, because the Church had generally, and truly taught, that those celestiall Spirits now with God, did constantly commend unto him, the flourishing estate and safetie of his Vniversall Church: yea and of some also of the faithfull in particular, so farre as possibly by revelation from their God, or any other meanes what ever, they might be made acquainted with their severall wants. Which once conceived, as many times an ill use may be made of a sound doctrine; it was supposed to be a solaccisme in the way of piety, not to commend our prayers and desires unto them: Vntill at last, as there is seldome any medium inter summa & precipitia, no stoppe in tumbling downe an Hill before we come unto the bottome: the Saints in heaven against their wills, and besides their knowledge, became the onely mediators between God and man, in point of intercession.

And

And this the proceſſe of the Trent Councell, in drawing up the Article of the Invocation of the Saints: Sanctos una cum Christo regnantes orationes suas pro hominibus Deo offerre, and therefore, bonum atque utile eſſe ſimpliciter eos invocare, et ob ſeſ. 25. cap. 2. beneficia à Deo impetranda, &c. ad eorum orationes, opem, auxiliumque confugere. This ſaid, wee may more eaſily conjecture what kinde of Commemoration Saint George is like to finde in the Roman Liturgie now being.

(8) Let us looke then upon the Liturgie of the Church of Rome, and we ſhall finde it very copious in Saint Georges honour: the Liturgie of Rome as it is now corrected, and purged of almoſt all thoſe Legendarie Fables, which before gave occaſion of offence and laughter. And herein certainly we finde the Service very ſolemn; ſcarce any feſtiual there celebrated with more variety of prayer and divine offices. I will touch onely at ſome principall paſſages thereof: taking along with me yet the full courſe and method. The entrance or Preparatorie, this, Protexiſt me Deus à conventu malignantium: Alleluia. A multitudine operantium iniquitatem. Alleluia. Thou haſt defended me O God from the Congregation of the evill doers, Alleluia; & from the multitude of them that worke iniquity, &c. Then followes this prayer. Deus qui nos B. Georgij Martyris tui et meritis et interceſſione laſificas, concede propitijs, ut qui tua per eum beneficia poſcimus, dono tue gratia conſequamur. O God, which by the “merits and interceſſion of Saint George thy bleſſed Martyr, “doſt rejoyce our ſoules, grant we beſeech thee, that thoſe “benefits which by him we crave, may by the favour of “thy grace bee given unto us, through Jeſus Chriſt our Lord. The Epistle taken out in part, out of the ſecond unto Timothy, and the third Chapter. Where the Apoſtle telleth him, that he had knowne his doctrine, manner of life, purpoſe, ſaith, long ſuffering, charitie, patience, Perſecutions and afflictions, which came unto him at Antioch, at Iconium, at Lyſtra, out of all which the Lord delivered him, &c. The Goſpell taken out of the 15. Chapter of Saint Iohn, Ego ſum vitis vera, I am the true Vine, &c. The cloſe of all is this, after the whole Maſſe ended, which they call the Postcommunion:

Supplices te rogamus omnipotens Deus, ut quos tuis reficis sacramentis, &c. Almighty God, we humbly beseech thee, that "we which are refreshed by thy holy Sacraments, may by "the intercession of thy blessed Martyr George, serve thee
 "hereafter in all godly motions, &c. To which the Liturgie of the Church of Rome, I will here add a Collect of the old Missall, (Sec. Usum Sarum) which piously interpreted, hath nothing in it favouring of superstition, and is withall more proper to Saint Georges storie. Viz. Offerimus tibi De- mine solemne sacrificium pro veneranda S. Georgij mart. tui pas-sione, deprecantes clementiam tuam, ut per hoc S. S. mysteria antiqui hostis tentamenta te triumphante vincamus, et aeterna re-munerationis prandium te largiente sequamur. We offer unto "thee O Lord, the solemne sacrifice (of praise and thank-"giving) for the death and passion of Saint George thy Mar-
 "tyr, beseeching thy divine clemencie, that by these holy "mysteries, we may in thee subdue the manifold temptati"ons of our old enemy the Divell; and be rewarded by thy "grace, with life eternall. The first of these two prayers, taken out of the Roman Missall, I finde also in the Breviario, the Diurnum, and the Officium B. Mariae Virginis; so copious is that Church in the memorial of our Martyr.

(9) I doubt not but it will be here objected, that we are driven to hard shifts, when we are faine to repaire to Rome, from thence to prove Saint Georges Saint-ship. This we expect to heare of, and are ready to reply, that this is hardly worth objecting. For here we draw no argument to prove how lawfully Saint George may be invoked, or that his intercession may be used, for the more quick dispatch of our affaires in the Court of heaven. Onely we note from hence, that antiently, & in the purer times of the Roman Church, Saint George was constantly commemorated, and in his proper course, as a noble Martyr. Vpon which ground, which in it selfe is good and commendable; if they have built, out of their owne, Wood, and Hay, and Stubble; a dangerous and erroneous practise, not warrantable in the Church: I hope, without offence, it may bee lawfull for me, or any else, to make the profitablest use out of their errors;
 and

and to verifie the truth and goodnesse of the ancient practise in this case, out of the faultie and erronious corruption of the present. For I perswade my selfe, that in points onely of Historicall being we may rely, in part, upon their publike Liturgies, and that we may conclude, that surely such a Saint there was, as George, or Maurice, or Sebastian, or the rest there honoured; because I finde them in the Missall and the Breviary; no man of this or any age, having as yet informed mee, that they have lately beene inserted into the bookes of Common Service. Nay, as in nature, there must be first an habit, before we can admit of a privation; and that in things corrupted, we must suppose a true and reall being of that thing, thus fallen into corruption, so we may well inferre, upon a view of the corruptions in their Liturgies, that certainly there was some excellent use at first, of such a ceremonie, or such an institution, how ever that the foule corruptions of the present, have polluted and defiled it. I would not wish me thinkes, an argument of more validitye to prove the act of kneeling at the Lords Supper, to be of good Antiquitie in the Church of Christ: and from the adoration of it (or of the Hostie rather as they call it) exacted in their Rituals; which is, no doubt, a superstitious, if not idolatrous corruption, of that ancient and reverend use of Kneeling. Nor would I choose a faire way of disputation, to justifie the honourable estate of the married Clergie, against the clamours of the Papists; than to returne upon them, that in the publike service of the Church of Rome, it is reputed commonly, though falsly, for a Sacrament: which false conceit of theirs, is a corruption onely of the just and pious meaning of the Fathers; who therefore did extoll it in the highest measure, the better to beat down those Heretickes which had disgraced it. More might bee said in affirmation of this manner of proceeding; had I now either place or leisure. At this time onely this, that I should more rely in matters merely of Historicall being, upon the Liturgie of Rome, which certainly is not contrived upon no other ground, then Lyes and Fables: than upon any mans bare word, which saith the contrary; or such weake arguments ; as are not able to conclude the matter controverted. And so farre I dare goe with Camus ; conceive mee still in matters of this qualitie : Nullas hujusmodi rationes, ab antiqua patrum traditione, quam communis Ecclesie consuetudo in divino officio, hymnis, antiphonisque confirmavit, potuisse me movere.

then

(10) To take off this exception yet more thoroughly, we will consult the Easterne Churches ; whom we shall find no lesse indulgent unto the memory of our Martyr. The Greeke Church anciently had her Anniversary Panegyriks, in honour and commemoration of the Saints departed. Witnesse those eloquent orations still extant, in Nyssen, Nazienzen, and S. Basil. And so we have it on record for our owne particular, Encomium in S. Martyrem Christi Georgium, quod habitum fuit in die, in quo Martyrium ejus celebratur, per Simeonem Metaphrasten. But besides this, S. George had a particular place in their publick Liturgies ; and a peculiar service for the day allotted to him. Which Liturgies as they were composed originally, that for the Festivals by S. Basil, and that for common daies by S. Chrysostome : so have they since beene much enlarged, and in part altered, by the addition of such Saints and solempne services ; as since their times, have found admittance in those Churches. That for Saint Georges day, used in the Greeke Church generally, is both too long to be here repeated ; nor can it easily be epitomized or abridged : consisting much of diverse prayers and Eulogies, to and of S. George, continued with diverse readings, out of the prophecy of Esaiah, the Booke of Wisdomes, and from the 14. of the Acts ; pursued by severall Collects, made by sundry godly men ; and ended with a brieft reherfall of his life and history. These, amongst other of the Eulogies, I have chosen specially ; as a tast and relish of the rest : Ἦ μεγαλὴ βασιλείᾳ πατιώτα τῷ ὄντι, χαίρει καὶ ἐκφραίνεται. Θεοῦ καὶ εὐαρέσκειας πάντων καταφρόνησαι, ζῶντι τῷ αἰώνιῳ ἰουεῖ, Menolog. in Apr.

23

,, ὦ ἕρῃοῖς, &c. Rejoyce thou puissant Champion of the ,, mighty King, rejoyce I say and make good cheere.
,, Thou

„ Thou hast found favour with the Lord, and by despising all things here, hast met with life eternall in the Heaven of glories. And in another passage, χαίροις τῶν αθ-ητῶν ὁ μέγας ταξιδερχης, ᾧ πιστῶν παύτων προσφύγον ἐν τεύχεῳ, , καλλίνικε Γεώργιε. All haile, thou leader of the glorious ar-„ mic of the Martyrs, the refuge and defence of all faith-„ full people, thou famous Conquerour Saint George.
 In the Enchologie, and Anagosticon, and Αποβευangelium, besides the Anthologion, and Horologie already specified:
 we finde a like speciall mention of him also. Adde here-unto, that whereas neere 200. Saints are reckoned up by name in the Menology for Aprill, S. George in all their ri-tuals, hath a principall place: in some of them, hee and S.
Marke, with one or two others of cheife note, are onely specified and honoured with particular Lectures and Services. Whosoever is left out, hee is allwayes one, and indeed in the Apostoleuangelium the onely one, which is re-membred in that month.

(11) From the Greeke Church in generall, proceed wee in particular to the service of the Greeke Church in Hierusalem; and to the Liturgie thereof, entituled, Τυπικὸν τῆ ἐκκλησιαστικῆς ἀκολουθίας τῆ ἐν Ἱεροσολύμοις, &c. Out of this Typicon, I have selected onely such honourarie attributes, as are accumulated on our Martyr. First, in the title of the day, common with those that went before in the other Ri-tuals, save that it calls him θαυματουργόν, or the wonder-worker: then in a Collect, which are these. Ω ᾧ αἰχμα-λῶτων ἐλδοδράστης, ᾧ πᾶσιν ὑψωστικῆς ἀδινουήτων ἰατρῆς, βασιλέων ὑψομαχε, Ἐπιμορόρε, μεγαλομάρτυς Γεώργιε, ἀρίσβου Χειρῶν „ τῶ Θεῷ σωθῆναι τὰς ψυχὰς ἡμῶν. O thou which art the „ ransomer of the Captives, the succour of the needy,

 „ the Physitian of the sicke, the defender of Princes, „ thou glorious Martyr George named Tropaeophorus; call „ upon

„ upon Christ the Lord to have mercy upon us. Which Collect is found also in the ordinary Menologies for the month of April, and in the Horologion. Now lest the Southerne Churches, should bee thought lesse zealous of our Martyr, then the Greeke and Latine; the Æthyopians in their Missals doe no vulgar honour to him: placing him in their Oraisons, next Saint Stephen, and giving him the title of Honoris Stella, the bright Starre of honour. The passage extant in the 6. Tome of the Biblioth. S. Patrum, Printed at Paris, Anno 1589. about the middle of the Missal Qua Aſſiopes communicant utuntur: and is this that followeth. Custodi domino populum tuum in recta fide, & in gloria omni tempore, &c. per preces quas pro vobis facit immaculata Maria Virgo, &c. Per preces majorum Angelorum Splendentium, &c. ac S. Marci Evangeliste et Martyris, et S. Stephani Archidiaconi (hee meanes the principall of the seven Deacons) et Protomartyris, et S. Georgii Stella honoris, &c. quorum orationes, et benedictiones, et auxilium, et gratia, sit nobiscum in secula seculorum, Amen. In which, as in some other fore-recited passages of the Greeke Liturgie, although I doe not thoroughly approve the formes of praier yet I am sure, the formes of praier do thoroughly approve the Saint.

(12) But the Church stayed not here. But as it had appointed him a day of Commemoration, and solemnized that day with a peculiar service destinate unto it: so at the last, the day deputed to his commemoration, was made a festivall. An honour not communicated, but unto those most eminent of that goodly fellowship: and therefore a strong evidence of the Churches good affection to Saint George, and opinion of him. This done, in a Synod held at Oxon, Anno 1222: for the Latine Churches wherein it was enacted that this feast, with others therein mentioned, should afterwards be celebrated by the Parochiall Priests, with Divine services; and that the people should abstaine from

Lib. de festis.

from all servile works, as on other of the holy dayes. Ut viz. a Recoribus Ecclesiarum et Capellanis in obsequio Dni et laude devotissima celebretur: minoribus operibus servilibus illis diebus interdictis. So saith Hospinian. Since when, this festivall hath beene observed in most part of the Westerne Churches: and in the City of Rome it selfe with that exactnesse, that whereas every month hath some speciall festivals, wherein no Court dayes are permitted (as in our termes some festivals are so exempted) in April, those only of Saint Marke, and our blessed Martyr, are honoured with that priviledge, as is apparent by the statutes of that City published by P Gregorie the 13. somewhat before that time it was made an holy day in the Easterne part, by an Imperiall constitution of Emannell Comneninus Emperour of Constantinople, who began his reigne Anno 1145. For thus the Edict. Feriatum est 23. Aprilis, quippe quod tum magnificus Martyr Georgius honoretur. The twenty third of April, is to bee kept as Holy, because Saint Georges Passion was that day celebrated. A Festivall still solemnized in those parts with great magnificence: not any Holy day in those Churches, as I have heard some Gentlemen of good faith report, more punctually observed, nor Saint more duely and Religiously honoured. Yea they have added in their rubricks, this note of an especiall and most solemne FAST: ἀσπία, ὅπου καὶ ἑλαίαι κατάλυσις, cessation from the workes of labour, and abstinence, both from Oyle and Wines. Which generall agreement of the whole Church, and of so many famous parts of it, in the honour of our Martyr; may well bee used as a replie to Doctor Reynolds: who makes this answer to the Cardinall, that George indeed, may bee accounted famous in the Church, and his memoriall celebrated; but so as was the memorie of Catiline, ab audacissimis hominibus, domesticisque hostibus, onely by De Idol. Rom. ii. Ruffians, and by common enemies unto the State. If 1. c. 5

Bel-

adit.

Bellarmino meane otherwise, in saying, Georgii memoria semper fuit celeberrima; hee tells him plainly that hee lies. But I will not meddle with this quarrell, though I justly might.

CHAP.

CHAP. VI.

(1) The honour done unto the Dead, in the decent buriall of their bodies. (2) The reliques of the Saints, of what esteeme in the Church Primitive. (3) The care of Gregory of Tours to preserve his writings: and what hee testifieth of St. George's reliques. (4) What mention there is made of them in Aymonius, and others. (5) What may bee hence concluded from Saint Georges Relicks. (6) Churches distinguished anciently by the names of Saints, and for what reason. (7) Saint Georges Churches in Lydda, and in Ramula; made afterwards a Bishops See. (8) Saint Georges Church built by Sidonius Archbishop of Ments. (9) That Mentioned in Saint Gregories Epistles. (10) Saint Georges Church in Rome; the title of a Cardinall. (11) Churches erected to Saint George in Alexandria and elsewhere. (12) Of Faustus Rhegiensis. (13) And the Pseudo-Martyr in Sulpitius. (14) An application of the rule in Lerinenfis unto the businesse now in hand.

(1)

He third of those three courses, whereby the Church endeavoured to preserve alive the memory of the Saints and Martyrs: was the collecting of their Reliques, and laying them with all due honours, in some place fit, and worthy of them. Which piety of theirs, extended at the first, no further, than to the pious and devout interment of their bodies: the tyranny of those which first made havocke of the Church, extending in those times, no

Divin insul. 5.
611.

no further, than to death. So reade we of Saint Stephen, the Protomartyr of the Church ; that being stoned unto death, certaine devout men carried him, (or his body rather , which was his Relique, all that was left of him) to the buriall, and made great lamentation. But in succeeding times , as, the persecution grew more violent , so also grew the Tyrants more unmercifull, and barbarously cruell : no longer new contented with the simple death of those that suffered ; but tearing of their limbes asunder, and scattering abroad their bones , and casting forth their ashes into the wind, that so they might not have the honour of an honest buriall. So witnesseth Lactantius of Diocletian, under whom Saint George was made a Martyr, Et non tantum artus hominum dissipat (saith hee) sed & ossa comminuit, & in cineres furit, ne quis extet sepulchræ locus. A desperate and raging Tyrant, qui in eam vivis, terram mortuis denegabat , which neither would allow the benefit of life unto the living, nor buriall to the dead. In these and such like barbarous and cruell times, it was the commendable custome of the Christians, to recollect those bones which by the Tyrants had beene so scattered ; and to interre them with due honour : that even the Bones also which were broken might rejoyce, that so those precious Reliques of their deere brethren , which were to meet together in a joyfull Resurrection, might not lye scattered, up and downe the fields, a scorne and laughter to the Gentiles.

(2) At length according as the minds and thoughts of men, were raised unto an high esteeme and admiration of the Martyrs: so did they with a greater zeale frequent their shrines; and set an higher price and estimate upon their Reliques. Not carefull onely, to afford them all due respects; because of those many miracles which it pleased God to worke in and about those places, where they were intombed: but in short time, ascribing some divine and secret vertue to them; whereof, Heaven knowes, they were not guilty. It is recorded that the Turkes in the sack of Lysa, finding the tombe of Scanderbeg, did violently breake it open, open, and take thence his bones, every one somewhat, more or lesse, as they could divide them: vainely conceiting, that they should never have the worse in any action; as long as any Relique of that victorious Souldier, was about them. So also that opinion, which the people of those devout and pious times, had first upon good grounds conceived of any of the Martyrs; and that respect, which worthily at first, they bare unto their shrines and Reliques: degenerated at the last so farre, that they fell also into the same conceit, and superstitious folly. Hereupon were the monuments and dormitories of the Saints againe opened: their bodies translated, some of them entire, into new Sepulchres; and others dismembred peece by peece, and carried into farre Countries: that Church or Nation being conceived most happy, which had procured any the least bone into their possession, of such especially of the Saints, which were in greatest credit and opinion with the people. So that now the cruelty of the barbarous Tyrants, in the height of persecution; might seeme to be revived, in the dawning of superstition. Which notwithstanding, there might perchance be somewhat said in their excuse: as viz. that the Reliques then by them so zealously affected, were true and reall; not counterfeited by any cheating Mountebanke; and therefore worthy of all due respect and reverence. For who so cold in his affection to the Saints, that would not gladly give them honour, even in their dust? So much respect, no question, may bee due unto the Reliques of the Saints, if truly such; as by Pope Leo was afforded to a parcell of the crosse, sent to him by the Bishop of Hierusalem: of which hee tels that Prelate in an answer to him, Particulam Dominica Crucis, cum oculis dilectionis tue, veneranter accipit: That hee received it with great reverence and thanks.

(3) Not to descend more downward, wee will looke backe into the former times, and therefore least corrupted, wherein we finde first mention of the Reliques of Saint George. And in the first place we meet with Gregory of Tours, Hist. Franc. l. 9.

prope finem.

De glor. Mart.
cap. 101.

• Tours, who flourished in the next age after Pope Leo above named, and dyed about the yeere 596. A man of speciall quality, a Bishop by his calling; and as he testifieth himselfe, Author of many severall bookes and treatises. Quos libros licet rusticiori stile scripserim, &c. Which though hee wrote in a more plaine and homely stile, yet he doth earnestly conjure all those, which should succeed him in that charge, per adventum Domini nostri, &c. Even by the coming of our Saviour Christ, and by the dreadfull day of judgement; that neither they suppress them, or cause them to be unperfectly transcribed: Sed ut omnia vobiscum integra inlibataque permanent, sicut à nobis relictà sunt; but that they be preserved as uncorrupted and entire, as they were left by him. Of these bookes, seaven of them did especially concerne the Miracles of the holy Martyrs: and in the first thereof, he tels us in the generall, Multa de Georgio martyre miracula gesta cognovimus, that he had knowne of many miracles done by Saint George. And in particular, to our purpose, habentur cum reliquia in vico quodam Cennomannensi, ubi multa plerumque miracula visuntur: some of his Reliques also are in a Village of Le Maine, where, often times there were seene many miracles. There is a further passage in that Booke and Chapter, which by the Author is related more at large; but it is briefly thus. Huius reliquia cum reliquorum Sanctorum à quibusdam ferebantur, &c. Some certaine men that carried with them some of Saint Georges Reliques, and of others also of the Saints, came once unto a place in the frontiers of Lymosin: where a few Priests, having a little Chanterie or Oratorie made of boards, did daily poure out their devotions to the Lord. There, for that night, they begg'd for lodging; and were accordingly made welcome. The morning came, and they prepared to goe forward in their journey; they were not able to remove their Knap-sacks [capsulas,] out of the place wherein they laid them. Loth to depart without their Reliques, it came at last into their mindes, that sure it was the will of God, they should bestow some of them on their Hosts: which being done, the difficulty was removed, and they proceeded

"ded in their journey. I note from hence, that in this Gregories time, or before it rather; the Reliques of Saint George were in speciall credit: and so by necessary consequence the Saint himselfe exceeding famous.

(4) Not to say any thing here of Saint Georges head, and of the Temple built of purpose by Pope Zacharie, in honour of it; which wee shall speake of presently, in a place more proper: we finde the Reliques of our Martyr mentioned with great honour in Aymonius; An Author of the middle times, anno 873. not long before the shutting in of the first day of learning, in the Christian Church: one of the Monkes of Saint Germanus Monasterie, in the Suburbs of Paris, and publike notarie thereof, for the time being. Before we come unto his testimony, we must first take notice, that Childebert, sonne of Clovis, the first Christian King of France, who beganne his raigne about the yecere 515. did in the later of his time, anno 542. erect a Monasterie neere Paris, unto the honour of Saint Vincent. This Monasterie thus founded, as he endowed it with many lands, and large immunities: so he enriched it with the Reliques of Saint Vincent, and Saint George, and part also of the Holy Crosse, all which hee brought with him out of Spaine, whither he had before made two famous journeyes. Wit-Hist. de gest. nelse whereof the Charter of the Foundation, copied out Franc 12 c. 20. by Aymonius: and is as much of it as concernes our purpose, this which followeth. Childebertus Rex Francorum, &c. In honorem S. Vincentij Martyris, (this Vincent was converted by Saint George as before is said) cuius reliquias de Spania apportavimus, ac S. Stephani, et S. Ferreoli, et S. Iuliani, cum et sancta crucis, et beatissimi S. Georgij, et S. Gervasij, Protasij, Nazarij, et Celsi pueri, quorum reliquie ibi sunt consecrata, &c. An evidence of speciall moment to the point in hand: for though Aymonius himselfe lived since the yeer 800. when reliques might be perhaps false & counterfeited; yet beares the Charter date almost 300. yeeres before him: which, as the Register of the Monasterie, he might freely see, and as he found it, faithfully transcribe the same.

L33. cap. 9.

as no doubt he did. Note herewithall, that where the other Saints here mentioned, are called onely Saunt; S. George, is honoured with another title farre more glorious, even that of Beatissimus. In the same Author also, wee have another story of Saint Georges arme, given by Iustinian the Emperour unto Saint German, then Bishop of Paris, as he returned from his Pilgrimage to Hierusalem, by the way of Constantinople: Unaque brachium D. Georgy Martyris, pro magnomunere contulit, as mine Author hath it. Which Relique was afterwards by Saint German, bestowed upon the Abbey of Saint Vincens, wherein he was interred: and which since then, hath beene called Saint *German*s. Thus much I finde on good record touching the Reliques of our Martyr (not to say any thing of his heart, presented, as I finde, by Sigismund the Emperour, unto King Henry the fifth of England, and by him solemnly laid up in the Church at Windsore. This as a thing of later date, I purposely omit, intending onely to shew, that even from the beginning, his Reliques and himselfe, were alwaies had in speciall honour.

Lib. 2.

Lib. 3. c. 7.

(5) From this which we have spoken hitherto, to looke no lower of Saint Georges Reliques, we shall deduce this, as I take it, most invincible argument, that George the Arian cannot possibly be George the Martyr, so much celebrated. We shewed before out of Ammianus, that when the Alexandrians had torne their Arian George in pieces, they burnt his body in the fire, and not so onely, but cast his ashes in the sea. The matter not affirmed alone by Ammianus, though his authoritie be sufficient in this case, but almost all our Writers in History Ecclesiasticall. So Secrates affirms, that when they drew him from the Church in which hee was, καμήλω τε προσδίουσιντες, binding him to a Cammell, and tearing of him all to pieces, συν αὐτῇ κατέκωσαν, they after burnt them both together. So Sozomen, that having bound him to the Cammell, and all day baited him with bitter contumelies, πρὶ δειλῶ ὅψιν πρὶ περιδωκῶν, about the evening twilight, they committed him unto the flames.

flames. Saint Epiphanius adds, which makes the harmony with Ammianus more exact, that after they had burnt his body, the people mixed his ashes with the bones of certaine beasts, which were burnt together with him: ἡ μὲν οὖν τοῖς ἀνέμοις διχύνθη, and scattered them unto the windes. If so, as so it is, then certainly the Arian George, whose body was consumed to ashes, and all the ashes of it scattered before the windes, and upon the seas: cannot be possibly that George, whose Reliques were so long preserved, so carefully laid up, so devoutly honoured. It had beene such a sortish madnesse both in Priests and people (especially so neere the time of the Arians death) to apprehend those Reliques, as of such a Martyr, of whom there were no Reliques left: that cannot easily be imagined. Which is enough to prove that George the Martyr so much honoured in his Reliques, when Gregory of Tours was living, and before, must be a different George from him of Alexandria. These passages which concern his Reliques before recited, are of good antiquitie, and therefore not to be suspected as false and forged. But if we will beleve what is reported of them, and pretended to be his in these latter times, Theodorus Anselmini, a Gentleman of Abruzzo, in an historie of Saint George by him written in Italian, and published in the yere 1612. shall tell us, that besides his head laid up by Zachary, Pope of Rome, in Saint Georges Church, of which hereafter. They have there also one of his Standards, some of his bones, and a little also of his blood. As also that in Bamberg, a citie of high Germany, they have his banner, and (preserved and shewne saith Hermannus Schedel magna cum solemnitate, with great solemnities:) that of his armes, one is at Venice, another at Brundisium, (what then became of that given by the Emperour Iustinian, to S. German, and by him layed up in S. *Vincent*s Abby, as before is said,) and that in Bologne (or Bouonia) one of his jaw-bones is to be scene unto this day. And for the close of all, that an especiall friend of his, of this Anselmini, had in his custodie, una de suis denti intiero, one of his teeth intire, neither broke nor putrified. All these pretensions, though vain and frivolous, ious, may yet conduce to the inforcing of the present point: viz. that, that Saint George, whose reliques are supposed to be in so many places, cannot be possibly conceived to bee that Arian heretick, of whom as all historians agree joyntly, there was not any relique left.

(6) And now at last, wee come unto the last of those foure waies or courtes, whereby the Church endeavoured to preserve alive the memoriall of the Saints and Martyrs: viz. the calling of such Temples by the names of those blessed Spirits, which shee had solemnly erected to Gods speciall service, and consecrated to his honour. A custome which she had long practised, even in the very times and heate of persecution: when, as it was more dangerous unto the Church it selfe, and more displeasing to the tyrants, so was it also more full of honour and respect unto the Martyr. Witnesse whereof those many Temples, erected in the Empire of Severus, Gordian, Philip, and Gallienus; demolished after, in the time of Dioclesian, and re-erected by the Decree and Licence of Maximinianus. Which Temples so erected, were consecrated, though in a second place, unto the memory of some or other, of the more notable and famous of the Saints departed, in those fierie times; as may appeare by that which we have elsewhere cited out of Marcellinus: as viz. how the Alexandrian people had cast the ashes of their Arian Bishop, George, & those whom they had murdered with him, into the sea; ne ades illis exstruerentur ut reliquis, lest Temples should be built unto them, as had beene formerly to those, who dying for the Faith, are entitled Martyrs. But in the time of Constantine, wee finde the practise of it very frequent in the Church: the Emperour himselfe dedicating one of his owne building, ἐν πόλει καὶ ἀποστόλων, unto the blessed memory of the Apostles. As for his Mother, the most illustrious Helena, wee finde of her erecting, a Temple dedicated to the Virgin Mary, in the Towne of Bethlehem; another to Saint Iohn the Baptist, in the Mountaines of Iudea; another to Saint Peter on mount Sion. Nor were those blessed spirits the Apostles thought worthy worthy onely of these honours, but the rest also of the holy Martyrs and Confessors: the first of this ranke, which I have met with in my reading, being that of Dionysius, in the Citie of Alexandria, whereof hee once was Bishop, and there at first, one of the Auditors of Origen. Built, as I doe conceive it, in the time of Persecution, by the Gentiles, and burnt as the Historian tels us, in the time and tumults of the Arians: Ο δὲ αὐτὸς τὴν ἐπωνύμιον Διονύσιον, τε τῆς νικ. Αlexandria) ἐπισκοπήσας, ἐκκλησίαν ἐνέσκηψεν. So Sozomen.

*Sozomen lib. 3.
 cap. 5.*

Now the reason why it pleased the Church to give the names of Saints and Martyrs to their Temples, was not (as our incomparable Hooker hath observed rightly) either that they should serve unto the worship of those glorious spirits, or that those blessed spirits now made glorious, should take upon them the protection and patronage of those places: but partly in respect that by the ministration of those Saints, it pleased God there to shew some rare effect of his power; and partly in regard that by their deaths, which there the Saints did suffer for the testimony of the truth, the places where they dyed were made more venerable.

(6) In these respects, Saint George had many Churches built and consecrated, as to Gods service principally. so, as before I said, in a second place, unto his memory. The first, (for I will onely touch upon a few of speciall note) the first I say, of those which hitherto I have observed; that in Diospolis, or Lydda in the tribe of Ephraim: built in the time of Constantine, immediately upon the death and dissolution of our Martyr. For thus the prosecution of Saint Georges storie in the Greek Martyrologie for November. Οὗ πολὺ πρὶν ἐν μέσῳ, καὶ τὸ εὐσεβείας διαλαμβάνον, &c. Not long after, religion then beginning to shine brightly forth, and Constantine the godly Emperour, then reigning; ἐν τῷ εὐσεβείᾳ καὶ τῷ μαρτυρῶν ἐξαυτῶν, ναὶν πρὸ ἀγίων χαρίσματος καὶ χάριτων ἐν Αὐτῷ ἀνεγείραν. Such as were well affected both to the Gospel and the Martyr, did build in Lydda, a beautifull and stately temple to his honour: translating thither his blessed corps, ἐκ τοῦ ἀφανῆ πύου, out of an obscure corner, where before it had been buried. A Temple of so high esteeme that the ἑσθία, or the feast of dedication of it, was kept as holy; and so continued unto all succeeding generations. For so the Title runes in the said Menology, τῇ αὐτῇ ἡμέρᾳ (it is the 3. day of the month) ἰορταζομεν τὴν ἑσθίαν τῆς πατρὸς τοῦ μεγάλου πυρρῶ Γεωργίου ἐν Λύδῃ (ἐν Λύδῃ in the following story) ἥτις τῶν κενόδεσιν τῆς ἀγίας πόλεως αὐτῆς. Which is a prooffe and place above all exception. This Temple afterwards, being ruinous, was, as it seemes repaired, or new-built rather, by Iustinian the Emperour, who lived within 150. yceres of the death of George the Arian, and was no friend unto the cause; but on the contrary, an Orthodox and godly Prince. So Gnibelonus Tyrinus speaking of our Martyr, and of this his Temple. Cujus Ecclesiam, quam ad honorē ejusdem Martyris pius & Orthodoxus Princeps Rom. Augustus, illustris memoria D. Iustinianus multo studio, & devotione prompta, edificari praeceperat, &c. as that Author hath it. This Church, was by the Turkes demolished, upon the comming of the armies of the Westerne Princes, for the Conquest of Hierusalem: for feare, lest else the timber of it, which was large and massie, might bee converted to some engines, for the battery of that City: Timentes, (saith the same Gul. Tyrinus) ne trabes Ecclesiae, quae multae proceritatis erant in machinas ad expugnandam Urbem vellet convertere. As for the Church now standing, which with some few cottagers of the Turkes and Arabs, is all that is remaining of the City: It was reedified by King Richard the first of England, as the natives say, at such time as hee warred in the Holy Land. So witnesseth Iohn Cotevicus, in his Itinerarium Hierosolymit. ~~Quia in hac urbe, praeter pauca Maurorum tuguriola, (saith hee) solum superest Templum in Divi Georgii Martyris memoriam, a Richardo Anglorum Rege, (ut aliqui putant) restauratum, super fundamentum antiquioris delubri a Iustiniano Caesare erecti.~~ Not farre from Lydda, is the little City of Rama or Ramula, supposed to be the dwelling of Ioseph of Arimathea: where our Saint George was honoured with another Temple defaced by the Turkes also. Cujus ibi ab antiquo fundatam Ecclesiam,

Turci

Hist. bel. sec. 17
c. 2.

Turci nonnihil deformaverant, in the words of Malmesbury: Hence I collect, that seeing one of these Churches is called ancient, ab antiquo; and that the timber of the other was large and massie: that certainly Saint George was anciently honoured with his Temples; by the magnificence of which, wee may conjecture at the fame and credit of the Saint. These Churches were in times succeeding, made by D. Godfrie, and the Christians of the West, a Bishops see, both Cities and the Villages adjoyning, appointed for his diocesse: Primitias laborum suorum cum omni devotione egregia Martiri dedicantes; those Nobles Princes so consecrating the first fruits of their Victories, to our glorious Martyr. The first Bishop of them, was a Norman, of the Diocesse of Roan: his title, Bishop of Saint Georges; of which see more in our second Chapter of this second Part; ¶ 4. This Church in Ramula, is mentioned in the Greeke Menology for April; the Towne there called Ramel: as it also is, by the Lady Anne Commena. In which said Greeke Menology, we reade of a Saint Georges Church in the Isle of Mitylene, said to be καλὴ καὶ ἁγία, both beautiful and very famous: and one in Paphlagonia, said there, to be καλὴ, of good renowne. So also in Armenia, in the Towne called Leontopolis, but after Buzana, wee finde a Temple built to Saint Georges honour, by the Emperour Iustinian, who began his Empire Anno 527. The thing related by Procopius Casariensis, an Author of no meane Esteeme amongst the learned: who lived about those times, and purposely hath written, De Edificiis Iustiniano; and therein this particularly, which now wee speake of, καὶ ἐν Γεωργίᾳ τῇ μέγιστῃ ἐδείματο. Note also, that Iustinian so liked the place, that hee reedified the Citie, and called it by his owne Iustinianopolis; making Saint George, it seemes, the Tutelarie Saint or Guardian of it.

(7) Let us passe next for Europe, and first in Thrace, and in the City called Didymotichum, we have a famous Temple consecrated to Saint Georges name, but by whom founded, or of what antiquity, I cannot say. Onely I finde, that as the City hath beene sometimes honoured by the residence of the Greeke Emperours: so hath the Church beene honoured with their coronations. Of which see Contaczenus Hist. lib. 3. cap. 27. Passe wee on further unto Almaine, the seate and residence of the Westerne Empire, and there wee have in Mentz a goodly fabricke erected to S. Georges honour built by Sidonius, Archbishop of that City, who flourished in the yeere 556. and after. Of this Venantius Fortunatus Bishop of Poitiers, Florens Doctrina & Sanctitate, (saith the Cardinall) famous for piety and learning, hath in his Sacra Carmina composed this Epigram. Hee lived about the yeere 570.

*Biblioth. Pat.
sem.*

*In Basilicam Sancti Georgii quam edificavit
Sidonius Archiepiscopus Moguntinus.*

*Martyris egregii pollens micat aula Georgii, Cujus in hunc mundum spargitur altus honos.
Carcere, caede, siti, vinclis, fame, frigore, flammis, Confessus Christum, duxit ad astra caput.
Qui virtute potens, Orientis in axe sepultus, Ecce sub Occiduo cardine prebet opem.
Ergo memento preces, & reddere vota, viator;
Obtinet hic meritis, quod petit alma fides.
Condidit Antistes Sidonius ista decenter: Proficiant animæ, quæ nova Tempa, sua.*

Vpon Saint Georges Church, built by Sidonius Archbishop of Mentz.

Saint Georges glorious Temple here behold, Whose noble Acts through all the world are told.

Who

Who in so many severall torments tried,
 Confess'd his Faith in Christ, confessing died.
 Who great in power, though buried in the East;
 Extends his wondrous graces to the West.
 Therefore pay here thy vows, who ere thou bee;
 Where such a Saint is neere, to joyne with thee.
 This goodly Temple did Sidonius build:
 Vnto his Soule may it due comforts yeild.

(8) One Temple yet there is, ancienter, as I conceive, than either of the two last mentioned, founded by whom, I cannot tell; but specified by Pope Gregory the I. in an Epistle to Maurinianus then an Abbat; with great care, and in these particulars: The superscription of it, Gregorius Mau- riniano Abbati; the subject of it, De Ecclesia S. Georgii resta- randa; touching the reparation of Saint Georges Church: Epist. l. 9 c. 68.
 the Letter this as followeth. Quia Ecclesiam S. Georgii po- stam in loco qui Ad Sedem dicitur, minorem quam oportet dili-gentiam habere cognovimus: utile esse prospeximus quoniam Monasterium tamquam eidem Ecclesia noscitur esse conjunctum, ejus tibi curam committere: hortantes ut & sollicitudinem illic con-gruam studeas adhiberi, & Psalmodia Officium sollemniter exhiberis facias. Et quia Ecclesiam istam reparatione certum est indigere, volumus ut quicquid illuc accedere poterit, ipse accipere, atque in ejus reparationem, ut praevideas, debeas erogare. Saint Georges Church, situate Ad Sedem, not being lookt unto, with that diligence, which belongs unto it; and since it is so neere unto your Monastery; wee thinke it good to commit the care thereof unto you: Requesting, that you would bestow your utmost diligence upon it;
 and have a care the Psalmody, or daily prayers, bee solemnely performed. And since we have beene credibly informed, that it is out of reparation, it is our pleasure, that you gather up the profits of it, and lay them out upon the worke, so farre as you thinke it fit. So farre the letter. As for the writer of it; not to say any thing of his exceeding industry and learning, whereby he gained unto himselfe, the attribute of Magnus; hee died about the yere 604.

Dial. 1.3.30

604. before which time, the Temple of S. George was now growne old and ruinous; quite out of reparation. Which being so, considering what durable Materials, Churches are commonly composed of; and in what strong and lasting forme compacted: I am almost perswaded, that the Church here mentioned, was built immediatly upon the death and dissolution of our Martyr. Nor is it to bee thought, but if Saint Gregory had knowne, (as who can thinke him ignorant) that this Temple had beene built in memory of George the Arian: hee rather would have suffered it to have gone to ruine, or tooke some course to have it levelled with the ground; then beene so carefull to reparaire it. For what else were it, but a Trophee of the Arian heresie, an eie-sore to the Church, a scandall to Religion: should such a man as Gregory have taken such especiall care to reparaire a Temple, built in the honour of so lewd and barbarous a tyrant. Assuredly this Gregory, taking such order, as hee did, to purge Saint Agathes Church in Rome, which was defiled onely with the Arian meetings: it cannot bee, hee would so carefully provide to rebuild another, which had beene dedicated to a Champion of the Arian heresie. The like may be affirmed also of Sidenius, before mentioned: who as he was a godly Prelate, so lived hee neerer to the times of George the Arian; then this Gregory did, within two hundred yceres of that Tyrants death; and cannot easily bee thought to build a Temple, to the memory of so vile an hereticke.

(9) From Gregory we will descend to one of his successors in the chaire of Rome, by name, Pope Zacharie, who entered on that dignitie, Anno 742. the founder of Saint Georges Church in velo aureo, or as some others call it, in volabro, a part of Rome. The chiefe occasion of the building, was our Martyrs head, which precious Relique he found in the Cathedral or Metropolitane Church of Rome, together with a little scroll in Greeke characters, which certified him whose it was. Exceeding ioyfull whereupon, he called the multi-multitude together, and then and there, with hymnes and spirituall songs, he caused it to be carried to this Church in velo aureo: where afterward, saith Anastasiu Bishop: that the Lord vouchsafed to worke many miracles by this blessed Martyr. But heare the Author in his owne language.

In venerabili patriarcho (saith he) Sacratissimum B. Georgij Martyris, idem sanctissimus Papa [Pope Zacharie] in capsâ reconditum reperit caput, in qua & pistacium iuvenis pariter grecis literis exaratum, ipsum esse significantes. Qui sanctissimus Papa omnino hilaris & satisfactus, illico aggregato Romane urbis populo, cum hymnis et canticis spiritualibus, in venerabili diaconio ejus nominis, sita in hac Romana civitate, regione secunda ad velum aureum, illud deduci fecit. Ubi immensa miracula, & beneficia, omnipotens deus ad laudem nominis sui, per eundem sacratissimum Martyrem operari dignatur.

In vita Zach.

Platina more briefly tels it thus, Idem quoque basilicam B. Georgij in velabro condidit, eoque loci caput ipsum Sancti collocavit.

In vita Zach.

I know indeed that the latter editions of this Author, read it Gregorij, not Georgij; but questionlesse they are mis-printed: for in an old edition of this booke, printed at Colen, Anno 1529: and afterwards in that of Lovaine, corrected by Onuphrius, Anno 1572. it is Beati Georgij, as before we had it. A Church it seemes of great name and credit, on which of long hath bene the title of some Roman Cardinall. Onuphrius in his booke of Popes and Cardinals, amongst those eightene Diaconus, which he saith were as ancient as Pope Gregory the first: remembreth diaconiam S. Georgij in velabro, in the eighteenth place. Which very well agreeth with that in Anastasiu above mentioned, and also makes it evident, at the least in mine opinion, that this Pope Zacharie cannot properly be said to build this Church unto Saint George, as Platina affirmes, but repaire it rather: However it hath of long time bene the title of a Roman Cardinall, as before I said. To take an instance, one or two, the history of the Trent Councell mentions one Hieronymus Capiferreus, Cardinall of Saint Georges, and not long since, if he continue not till now, Jaques de Serra, Lord high Treasurer of the Sec of Rome, was honoured also with this title, advanced unto unto it on the seventeenth day of August, Anno 1611. under Paul the fifth. So to looke higher in the life of Alexander the sixth, we have there mention of one Raphael Cardinall of Saint Georges, Camerarius S. Ecclesie, High Chamberlaine of the State Ecclesiasticall. Pope Boniface the ninth, who first revived the Greeke Arts and Language in Rome and Italy, was sometimes honoured with this title. So also was Pope Martin of that name, the fifth, in whose election to the Popedom, the whole Councell of Constance, nationum omnium et Cardinalium consensu, did concurre unanimously. Of both which, see Platina, who calls this last, the Cardinall of Saint Georges, ad velum aureum, and not as elsewhere of some others, de velo aureo. Adde that in Bibliotheca patrum, Tom. 5. we have a tract de Iubileo, written by James, then Cardinall of Saint Georges: Iacobi S. Georgij ad velum aureum Diaconi Cardinalis, de Iubileo, liber unus, as the title tels us. Which James was nephew to Pope Boniface the eighth, by him advanced unto that office, in his first call of Cardinals, Anno 1295. So de la Bigne, the first Collector of those Volumes, out of an ancient Manuscript of Alphonso Chicaralli. I have the rather mentioned this James the Cardinall, because it is affirmed by Theodore Anselmini, above-mentioned, that hee once writ the history of Saint George the Martyr, in the Latine tongue. the originall whereof my Author saith, that himselfe hath scene carefully preserved in their Archiva, by the Canons of Saint Peters Church in Rome. Scriffe (saith he) in elegantissimo stile latino, la vita de S. Georgio come ne nostra il libro, laquale li Reverendis. Signori Canonici di S. Pietro di Roma con molta stima conservano nel loro antichissimo Archivio. And this the rather I beleeve, because this Theodore hath exemplified the very words wherewith the Cardinall concludes that history by him written, in this forme that followeth: viz. Prefata itaque B. Georgij passiones, gesta ego Iacobus S. Georgij ad velum aureum diaconus Cardinalis &c. dei largitione, martyris opitulatione, devotoque obsequio exequutus sum, &c. And as for that which is before reported of Saint Georges head, he doth not onely tell us what Pope Zacharie did in the translation there-thereof to Saint Georges Church: but adds that hee himselfe out of some curiosity, had both scene and handled it, and looked upon the Epitaph or scroll thereunto belonging, and after laying all up safe in the chest or coffin where before they were ad tutam eorum custodiam, sigillum nostrum presaso vasa reverenter apponimus, he sealed it for the greater safety, with his owne signet.

(adit.)

(10) Hitherto our enquiry hath beene made, in Asia, and in Europe onely; we will now crosse over into Africke that so it may appeare, that every part of the knowne world (I meane knowne anciently) hath in it some memoriall of our Saint and Martyr. In this we will content our selves with Alexandria, the Queene of Cities and Metropolis of Africa, as George Sandis calls her: where wee shall find an ancient Temple dedicated to Saint George. For thus the Letter of Iohn Comus, the Suffragan of Amba Gabriel, Patriarch of Alexandria, directed to Pope Clement 8. and dated on the 28. of December, Anno 1593. Tres Alexandria sunt Ecclesia Catholica: una nomine principis Angelorum S. Michaelis; secunda S. Marci Evangeliste, ac tertia nomine Marty-ris magni S. Georgij, extra urbem, ad litus maris falsi: et om-nes iste Ecclesie indigent adificatione, vestitu et impensis pauperum et egenorum. There are (saith he) three Christian Churches in Alexandria, Saint Michaels the Arch-angell, Saint Markes the Evangelist; and thirdly, that of Saint George the great Martyr, without the City, and nere unto the Sea; all which doe stand in need of reparation, ornaments, and money, for the entertainment of the poore. I know that Master Sams. Purchas doth account this Letter, and the whole businesse handled by Baronius in his Cerollarie, ad Tom. 6. where this Letter is; to be forged and counterfeit: as having in it, a submission of this Patriarke and the Church of Egypt, to the See of Rome; whereas indeed there was no such matter. But somewhat surely there was in it, which might occasion such an Embassie to Rome; and some dependance of the Christians of this Country upon the Pope: It being noted by G. Sandys, that.

*Pilgrimage 1. 6.
 cap 5. sect. 5.*

Rel. of his join.
lib. 2 pag. 110.

D. J. fol. Ro l. 1.
cop. 5.

Philipp. 2.

V. chap. 4. sect. 2.

“that multitudes of late have beene drawne to receive the “Popish religion, especially in Cairo, (the Seate of the Alexandrian Patriarke of the Cophites, or native Christians “of that country) by the industry of Fryers, having had the “Roman Liturgie sent them from Rome; together with the “Bible in the Arabicke language. As for the thing it selfe, it is affirmed by Master Purchas, that there are three Christian Churches in Alexandria, which is enough to confirm our purpose. The rather, since Doctor Reynolds makes no doubt but such a Church there was in Alexandria: Onely he saine would have it to be built in honour of the Arian George, not George the Martyr: and in the place, as he supposeth, where his most wretched body was consumed with fire. This he would gladly have, but for prooffe thereof, brings nothing but his owne conjecture; & verisimile est, that so it may be. If this be all, we answer, neither so, nor so: and then we say, as Cicero to Antony, quid minus est, non dico oratorio, sed hominis, quam id obijcere adversario, quod si ille verbo negarit, ulterius progredi non possis. A bare deniall were sufficient answer unto such an argument. But we say more, first negatively, that it is not evident that George the Arian was burnt neere the shore, where this Temple stands; though true it be, his bones and ashes were all cast into the sea by the furious multitude. Next positively, that this Church was built in memory of our Saint George, as is apparant by the title of Magnus Martyr, given him in the Epistle above mentioned: which as I shewed before, is frequently ascribed unto our Saint George; but to theirs it cannot. Other Churches there also are in Africa, dedicated to Saint George, of good antiquity, though of lesse note, as viz. that of Cairo in Egypt; & that of Beddi, in the Realm of Ethiopia. Of these I purpose to say nothing, nor of many other scattered up and downe in all parts of Christendome; of whose antiquitie and foundation, I am not able to produce some certaine monument. My purpose onely is, to speake of such which are most ancient, built neerest to the time of our Martyrs death, and as for those which have beene consecrated to his memory, with us, in England; we shall speake hereafter.

(11) If

(11) If any thing may bee objected against ought that we have spoken in this present chapter, and the last, it is in likelihood, the case of Faustus Rhegiensis, and the Pseudo-Martyr in Sulpitius Severus: both which were held for Martyrs, although the one of them was a Theefe, and the other counted for an Hereticke. Of Faustus Rhegiensis, who in the opinion of the antient Church, was reckoned for a Semi-Pelagian; it is affirmed by Doctor Abbotts, afterwards Lord Bishop of Salisbury, that he had place in the French Martyrologie, a Festivall allotted to him on the 17. of January, and a Temple dedicated to him by the people of his owne city. Immo et in Martyrologio Galicano inter Sanctos numeratum, eoque nomine, ab Ecclesia Rhegiensi, erecta nominis eius titulo insignita Basilica; et die festo. Jan. 17. honoratum, &c. De veritat. & grat. Ch. l. c. 1. It may bee hence objected, that all which we have spoken hitherto, is of little value: those honours having beene communicated even to Hereticke, such as Saint George is said to be, by Doctor Reynolds. To this we answer, first, that this was onely a particular Act of the nationall Church of France: their Faustus never being received generally, as Saint George was, in the Church-Catholique. And therefore it is said by my said Lord of Salisbury, that these honours were accumulated on him, spectante orbe Christiano, tacente Rom. Ecclesia, contradicente nemine: not by the approbation of the Church in generall; but onely a connivence at it, in regard of those of France. Secondly, that Faustus, though accounted for an Hereticke abroad, might yet be otherwise an honest and religious man, and so reputed in his owne citie, where afterwards hee had his Temple: For I have seene it somewhere cyted out of Chrysostome, πρεβ. ὁ αἰρετικὸς πονηρὸς ἐστὶ καὶ ὁλὸν ἐλοῦσθαι, that even an Hereticke may have a very faire and commendable conversation: And verily that such he was, Sidonius Apollinaris tells us, in his ninth Booke, and third Epistle, where he commends him both for eloquence and piety. See the Epistle, and the ninth of the same booke also. Last of all, Faustus was not such an Hereticke, that his memoriall should should be blasted for it, in all generations. Not such an Heretike, as aymed at the foundation of the Faith, as did the Arian; nor such, as overthrew the vertue of Gods grace; as did Pelagius. Onely he is accused, that undertaking to confute the writings of Pelagius; he did not runne a course quite contrary to the other; but in some tollerable manner, and in some points of lesse consequence; did seeme to trench upon his tenets. Where on the other side, the Alexandrian George, whom they would gladly thrust upon us for a Saint; was by profession, an Arian, one that denied a principle of the christian Faith, and to promote that damnable and wretched heresie, became a bloody and tyrannicall persecutor of the Church of God.

Second Sunday in Lent.

(12) As for the Pseudo-Martyr in Sulp. Severus, hee is by Doctor Boys, brought in, to prove against the Papists, how much they have abused themselves and all the Church, in canonizing those for Saints, who could bee no better then diuels. And in the next words, the Papists adore others who were neither Saints in Heaven, nor men on earth, as Saint Christopher, Saint George, &c. The cases here are Parallell; but sure it were a taske too weighty, either for him, or any other, to prove this Pseudo-Martyr to have bene canonized a Saint; or that he was reputed one, in the opinion of the Church. All which Sulpitius doth report is this; Not farre from Tours, wherof Saint Martyn then was Bishop, there was a little Oratorie much frequented by the common people, upon opinion that some holy Martyr had bene there buried. Saint Martyn who suspected presently that there was some Imposture in it, repaires unto the Chappell: and calling upon God to manifest the truth, a certaine shape passed by them, who confessed that he was once a Thiefe, but by the simple people reckoned as a Martyr; there being nothing in his life or death, to merit that opinion. Ille autem nomen edidit, de crimine confessor, latronem se fuisse, ob scelera percussus, vulgi errore celebratus, sibi nihil cum Martyribus commune esse, cum illos gloria, se poena retineret. This is the whole: and then a few poore poore simple people, must be reputed for the Church in generall, or else this inference is nothing to the purpose. Lesse that of Papius, which the Doctor speakes of in that place and passage. For if he passe not for a Saint, or if the Church may be condemned for so accounting him, because a Millenarian: how many of the antient Fathers must be needs excluded.

Sulpit. Sever. in vit. S. Martini lib. 1.

(13) There is a rule in Lerinensis, that that is to bee counted true in the Church Catholike, which hath beene so beleevd by all sorts of men, in all times, and in all places. In Ecclesia Catholica illud magnopere curandum est, ut teneamus id, quod ab omnibus, quod semper, quod ubique, creditum est. Vnlesse we can apply this rule unto the businesse now in hand; it is not our desire, that any man should thinke Saint George to be a Martyr. And first, if we consult the testimonies of all sorts of men, wee finde Saint George to be thus reckoned, both by Turkes (as in the next Chapter) and by Christians, by the West Churches, and the Easterne, by Papists, and by Protestants, by Princes, Prelates, and their people, by Writers antient and by moderne: If we expect the generall consent herein, of all the times and ages, since his death and martyrdom, we have already made it plaine by way of a Chronologie, that there hath beene no age, no not that Seculum infelix, as it is called by Bellarmino; in which we have not plentifull assurance of our cause. And for the close of all, looke into all parts of the world, and tell me which of all the three, hath not afforded honour to him as an holy Martyr. His name commemorated in the Martyrologies of Rome, and Greece, his Reliques revered in Spain, Constantinople, France and Germany: Temples erected to his honour, in Rome, Thrace, Ramula, Diospolis, Alexandria, Caire, and Ethiopia, and in other places; by Prelates, Popes, and Emperours. Temples in Asia, Europe, and in Africa? And in the principall Cities also of the East, and West, and Southerne parts of the whole world? Then certainly we may affirme of our S George, as the Historians did of Pompey; Quot partes terrarum sunt, tot ^{Patercul. l. 2.} fecit monumenta victoria sua. So then, the storie of Saint George, and the opinion of his being Martyr, having been entertained by all sorts of men, in all the ages of the Church, and all the quarters of the world: we may maintain according to the rule of Erasmus, that therefore it is to be counted true, without more disputing. The one affirmed by Doctor Reynolds, Georgius, quem Orientalis & Occidentalis ecclesia pro martyre colit; and in another place, universalem ecclesiam, hoc est, Orientalem & Occidentalem, Georgium pro Martyre coluisse: out of which one so granted, we will without demanding leave, conclude the other.
R fecit

De Idol. Rom.
l. 1. c. 5. § 166. 22.

CHAP.

CHAP. VII.

(1) Saint George how hee became to be accounted the chiefe Saint of Souldiers. (2) Saint George when first esteemed a chiefe Patron of Christianity. (3) The expedition of the Western Princes to the Holy Land. (4) The story of the succours brought unto their Army by Saint George. (5) Two other apparitions of that Saint to the Christian armies. (6) The Probability of the former miracle, disputed. (7) An essay of the famous battaile of Antiochia, by way of Poeme. (8) Saint George, the most generally received Saint in the Church Christian. (9) And of great fame among the Turkes.

(1)

Hitherto have wee spoken of Saint George, according as hee is esteemed, and honoured as a Saint, in the generall opinion of the Christian world: and of the publicke honors done unto him, in the Church of God, the ground and pillar of truth, as the Apostle calls it. Our method now doth leade us on, to marshall in those honours, which have beene also done unto him, by the Kings and Princes of the Earth: that so unto the testimony and suffrage of the Church, wee may adde also the full authority and power of the civill Magistrate. But since the honours done by them unto Saint George, consider him, some of them as a Saint in generall; some as a principal Patron of the affaires of Christendome, and others, as the Tutclary Saint or Guardian of military men: we must in briebe declare the reason, why he was made the Tutclary Saint of Souldiers, and at what time hee first began to be accounted, so principall a Patron of Christianity, before we can descend unto particulars. And first, if wee demand how our Saint George became to bee accounted the chiefe Saint of Souldiers: wee answer, that hee was himselve a Souldier of chiefe ranke and quality, and therefore, in the superstitious times before us, conceived to be most worthy to countenance that calling. For which cause also, it pleased the Church of Rome, who then did what she listed, to joyne with him in commission, although perhaps not with equall power, S. Maurice, and S. Sebastian: which

Rom. Mar. Sept.
22. & Jan. 20

Annot. in Rom.
Mar. 23. Apr.

Maurice and Sebastian also were both Souldiers of the same time with our Saint George, and both of eminent place in their severall armies: Mauricius being one of the chieftaines of the Theban Legion, slaughtred by Maximinianus, in his expedition towards Brittain; Sebastian a Commander of the first ranke, [Princeps primacohortis] under Diocletian. So witnesseth Baronius out of the Roman Ceremoniall de Divinis Officiis; Romanam ipsam Ecclesiam ad expugnandos fides hostes, hos precipue Martyres invocare consuevisse, Mauritium, Sebastianum, & Georgium. That which Baronius meanes, I take it, is the antient ceremony, used at the dubbing of a Knight, ad armandum Ecclesie defensorem, vel alium militem, in the Church of Rome, according to the forme prescribed in the Ordo Romanus, extant in the 8. Tome of the Bibliotheca Patrum, Printed ad Colen. p. 48 I. writ, as it is conjectured in the 8. Centurie. Where amongst many other prayers, there occurs this that followeth, immediatly upon the buckling on of the sheild, viz. Domine Deus qui conseris bella, et adjutor et protector es omnium in te sperantium, respice propitiis invocationem nostram, et per merita Sanctorum tuorum Martyrum et Militum, Mauricii, Sebastiani, Georgii, presta hinc viro victoriam de hostibus, et salva eum tuo gratuito munere, &c. The whole forme extant in that Ordo Romanus, which Baronius mentions: where we may see, that these three Martyrs, are invocated to this purpose, not because Martyrs alone, but because Milites. This as it was the reason why they were first selected, to take upon them the defence of military men: so it occasioned that Saint George, being chiefe upon the

the Earth, in birth, and honours, was also generally reckoned by the men of Warre, to be of greater power, than either of the other, and thereupon more generally prayed unto. Nay it appeares in an old French Ceremoniall, cited by Master Selden (for I am willing to acknowledge by whom I profit,) that the order of Knight-hood, was both demanded and given antiently in that Kingdome, in the name of God and Saint George onely: no other ceremony being used, but that the party to bee dubbed, being strooke thrice upon the shoulder with a naked sword, For saith the forme, when an Esquire of good both merit and estate, desireth to be made a Knight, hee ought first to acquaint his Generall, or any other valiant Knight with his intent And then it followeth. Alors doit venir devant luy, [the Knight or Generall] et demander, Seigneur, au nom de Dieu & de Saint George, donnez moy l'Ordre: et le dict de Chevalier ou Chef de Guerre, doit tirer l'Epee nue vers le dict demandeur, et doit dire en frappant trois fois sur iceluy, Je te fais Chevalier, au nom de Dieu & de Monseigneur Saint George, pour la Foy et Justice loyamment garder, et l'Eglise, Femmes-vefues, et Orphelins defender. Hence, is it, and upon such ground as these that the Poet Mantuan calls him the Mars of Christians: Mars, being at the first some notable man of warre himselfe, and afterwards the God of Souldiers, in the opinion of the Gentiles; as was Saint George the Tutelarie Saint of Souldiers, in the opinion also of some Christians.

Rom. Mar. Sept.
21. & Jan. 70

may.

Ut Martem Latini, sic nos, te Divo Georgi, Nunc colimus.

As Rome did Mars; so wee Saint George, doe honour thee.

R 3

And

And in another place.

Inclyte Bellorum rector, quem nostra Inventus Pro Mauris colit.

Thou famous President of Wars,
Whom we adore instead of Mars.

(2) Nor was S. George onely reckoned as a chiefe Saint of Souldiers; but after, and before, the English tooke him to themselves, esteemed a principall patron of the affaires of Christendome. For, as before I noted, the Christians used to call upon him (being so lessoned by their superstitious teachers) as an advocate of victory: and did implore his helpe, Ad expugnandas fidei hostes, in all their Warres against the enemies of our Religion; as they did also pray unto S. Maurice, and S. Sebastian, though not so generally. Hence is it that S. Marke, S. James, S. David, S. Andrew, and the rest, being once chosen the Protectors of particular States and Countries, were never importuned to take upon them the tuition, and defence of any others. It may bee, they were fastned unto those employments, as once the Tyrians chained the statua of Hercules, their especiall Guardian, to their Altars: for feare he might be wonne to take part against them, and give succour to their enemies. But of Saint George, we finde not any such sufficient bond, by which he is obliged either unto particular places, or designs: as one whom they thought good to leave at large, that so hee might the better succour the afflicted parts of Christendome. For which cause, howsoever in the latter dayes hee was conceived, to bee a speciall fautor of the English: yet have the Georgians and the Genoese, & as I take it the Greeke Emperours alwaies esteemed him as their Patron; and by the Russian and German Emperours, he hath beene made Protectour also of their Souldiers, and their Military orders, of which more hereafter. How, and on

P. Chap. 7

on what occasion, he came to have the generall Patronage of Christianity conferred upon him; at the least as I conceive it, I am next to shew : first making roome for that which followes, by a short, but necessarie digression.

(3) After the yeere 600. the affaires of Christendome began in all places to decline : the Westerne parts beginning to be over-spread by superstition ; the Easterne made a prey unto the Saracens, who in their Conquests laboured what they could to advance the sect of Mahomet. By this meanes , as they enlarged their Empire ; so did they also propagate the infinite impieties of that Impostour : whole Irreligion had the fortune, not onely to be entertained by those poore wretches, whom the Saracens had conquered : but also to inveigle them , by whom they were subdued. For when the Turkes, under the conduct of Tangrodispar , had made themselves masters of the Persian Empire ; then in possession of the Saracens : they tooke upon them presently the Law of that seducer , as if Mahometanisme had beene annexed inseparably unto the Diademe. Proud of this victory, and little able to conreine their active spirits in an obedient Peace at home ; they were employed in severall Armies, and to severall purposes : one of them, under Carsu-Moses , who turned his forces on the Christian Empire ; the other under Ducut and Melech , two kinsmen of the Persian Sultan , who bent their strength against the Saracens of Syria, and Damascus. In this designe, the issue proved so answerable to their hopes, that quickly they became possessed of almost all Armenia, Media, and the Lesser Asia , inhabited in most parts of them then by Christians : as of all Syria, the Holy Land, and therein of Hierusalem. So that in all the East, the Gospel of our Saviour was either utterly extinguished ; or his name celebrated onely in obscure and private places : Religion being in this state, the Christian Princes of the West, most of them then in peace and amity with one another, jointly and joyfully resolve upon the freeing of the miserable East, from thralldome. Perswaded there-unto, piously, by a Reverent Hermit, whose name was Peter, who had beene witness of those miseries which the Christians there endured: and cunningly by Urban, of that name the second, Pope of Rome; who by employing such and so many Princes in those remote Countries, fore-saw a way to bring the Roman Prelates to their so-much-expectated greatness. The Princes of most note which put themselves into the action, were Robert Duke of Normandy, brother to William Rufus King of England; Hugh brother to the King of France; Godfric of Bouillon Duke of Lorraine, with his two brethren Baldwin, and Eustace; Tancred, and Beomond, two noble Normans of the Kingdome of Naples: and he which for his spirit and magnanimity, might have been reckoned with the first; Ademar Bishop of La Puy en Velay, a little territory neere unto Auvergne in France, the Popes Legate. The Army which attended them, amounted to no lesse than 300000, fighting men, the time of this their expedition, Anno 1096: or thereabouts: their fortune so successfull, that they expelled the Turks out of all Asia the Lesse; compelling them into the Easterne parts of their dominions. Having no enemy at their backs, they passed the streights of Taurus: and entring into Syria which they quickly mastered; they sate them downe at last, before the famous City of Antiochia. A place of chiefe importance for the assurance of their new conquest; and therefore very much desired.

(4) This famous City after a long and painefull siege, was at last rendred to them: and the defence thereof, together with a large and spacious territory, committed to Prince Beomond. But as they rested here, for the refreshing of their troopes, extremely weakned in that tedious and lingring Leaguer; they were themselves besieged by an huge multitude of enemies: who though they came too late to raise the siege; were yet perswaded, that they came time enough to redeeme the Towne. This siege they kept so streight, that they within, not looking to be so invested; became in short space utterly disheartned: their store of corne, consumed, med, their horses dying every day for want of fodder; themselves continually diminished, and forespent, by want and sickness. No other means of safety left, they are resolved to put it all upon the fortune of a Battaille: which Battaille had they lost, there had been then an end of all their undertakings. But out they must; a few weak men, against a multitude of able Souldiers, well-horsed, and full of lusty spirits. Suppose the battailles joyned, and we will tell the rest out of Robertus Monachus a Benedictine of the Monastery of Rhemes, who flourished in the yeere 1120.

De Chr. princip. bello &c. l. 7

and wrote the story of this warre. Dum sic certatur (saith hee) & tam longi certaminis prolixitas nostros fatigabat, nec numerus hostium videretur decrescere, Albatorum milium innumerabilis exercitus visus est de montibus descendere, quorum Signifer et Duces esse dicuntur, Georgius, Mauritius, Demetrius: quos ut primum vidit Podiensis Episcopus, exclamavit magna voce, dicens, O milites ecce vobis venit auxilium, quod promissit Deus, &c.

Our Souldiers being wearied, with the long continuance of the Battaille, and seeing that the number of enemies decreased not, began to faint: when suddainly an infinite number of Heavenly Souldiers, all in white descended from the Mountaines; the Standard-bearer and leaders of them, being Saint George, Saint Maurice, and Saint Demetrius. Which when the Bishop of La Puy, (and not of Podie as it is commonly translated) first beheld; hee cryed aloud unto his troopes, These are (saith hee) the succours which in the name of God, I promised to you. The issue of the miracle was this, that presently the enemies did turne their backs, and lost the field: there being slaine upon the place, and in the chase, 100000. horse, besides foot innumerable; and in their trenches, such infinite store of victuals and munition found, that served not onely to refresh the wearied Christians, but to confound the enemy. This memorable Field, is generally reported to be fought, upon Saint Peters eve, Anno 1098.

(5) This

Hist Lombard,
in Georgio:

(5) This, if we were assured of it, were of it selfe enough for euer to entitle our Saint George (but in a second place) unto the generall patronage of Chriitianitie: and what may be conceived hereof, we shall see hereafter. In the meane time, I will relate some other passages of the same nature, which I have met with in my Authors. One in Iacobus de Voragine, by him borrowed out of the Chronicles of Antiochia, and is this that followeth. Legitur in historia Antiochena, quod cum Christiani pergerent ad obsidendum Hierusalem, quidam Iuuenis speciosissimus apparuit sacerdoti cuidam, qui S. Georgium duces Christi se esse dicent, monuit ut eius reliquias secum in Hierusalem deportarent, & ipse cum eis esset. Cum autem Hierusalem obsidissent, & Saracenis resistens ibi per scalas ascendere non auderent, S. Georgium in mris albis induam, & cruce rubra insignitus apparuit, inuocans ut post se securi ascenderent & ciuitatem obsiderent. Qui ut hoc animati, ciuitatem ceperrunt et Saracenos occidere. We reade (saith he) in the Chronicles of Antioch, that as the christian army marched unto Hierusalem, a beautifull young man appeared unto a certaine Priest, saying that he was George, one of the Captaines of Christ Iesus; and telling him withall, that if they tooke along his Reliques with them, they should not doubt of his assistance. After, when how they had besieged the Towne, and that none of them durst attempt to scale the wals, Saint George armed all in white, and a red crosse upon his breast appeared unto them, bidding them lay aside all feare, and follow him; which doing, they possessed the towne, and put the foe unto the sword. So he, and we may so farre trust him, that hee invented not this storie, but onely tooke it as he found it in the Chronicles of Antiochia: which, of what credit and authoritie they were, I am not able to determine. There is a third apparition of this Saint to the Christian armies, mentioned in an Appendix unto Radevisius, in a description of the Emperour *Friederick*s expedition into the East. Where wee are told, that as they were at Fimminum, not far from Laodicea, this memorable accident did befall them. S. Georgium eodem die, sicut

Apud Baron. in
Anna 1190. n. 9.

et prius, quasdam acies nostras a Ludovico de Helfseim, visus est precedere, impendens auxilium exercitui nostro. Saint George, " (saith he) was seene that day, as he had done the like before, to march before those troupes which were conducted by Lewis of Helfseim, reaching out succours to our armies. He proves this passage, first by the testimony of Helfseim himselfe, who both before the Emperour, and all the armie, solemnly did avow it, sub iure iurando et religione peregrinationis; and took it both upon his oath, and merit of his pilgrimage. Secondly, by the confession of the Turkes themselves; who affirmed unto them, se quasdam acies vidisse candidius amictus vestibus, et equis albis; that they then saw some forces on the Christian side, all clad in white, and mounted upon horses of the same colour. Both these, as they in time came after Mouke Robertus, so they may seeme, in case the stories bee not true, to derive themselves from him, or to be deceived together, by the relations of such soldiers, who had told it to them: and therefore whatsoever may be said, for or against the historie in Robertus, serves for themselves also. Add yet a fourth, but first in time, related by a namelesse Author, who lived about the yeer 1106. & writ the actions of the French Gesta Francorum, in the holy land. Which is, that at the first battaile fought betwixt Saladin the Turke, and the Christian Princes, Saint George accompanied with Demetrius, did for three dayes together, chase the Turkes, and utterly destroy them. Relatum est postea a quibusdam quia duos equos in albis vestibus, super equos albos sedentes, Turcos per triduum persequerentur, dicentes unum fuisse Georgium, alterum vero Demetrium, martyres gloriosos.

(5) Now as for that which is related to us, by Robertus, or Repertus, as some call him; and for his storie of the succours, brought unto the Christian armie by Saint George, it may be argued on both sides, and pleaded thus. First, on the negative, that Williams of Tyre, a learned man, and a good Historian, who lived about the yeere 1180. and wrote at large the story of the holy warres: in the description of this battaile, tels us no such matter. Onely we finde, that at the joyning

joyning of the armies, it pleased the Lord to raine a sweet and gracious dew upon the Christians: by which, their horses and themselves were very much refreshed. Next in the maintenance thereof, it may be urged and pressed as possible, yea and as probable also, by divers arguments. As first, that Tyrius in his silence, is not to be alledged against another's affirmatio; and that, though silent in the present, hee doth in other places make good mention of that miraculous assistance, which God sometimes vouchsafed the Christians in this warre. Particularly, that when they lay before the Towne of Antioch, and sent some troupes abroad for forrage, 700. of them put an huge multitude of the enemies unto the sword, their handfull seeming to the foe, to be a large and gallant army. Factum est divinitus (saith he) ut nostri qui vix essent. septingenta. infinita millia viderentur. He tels us also, that Prince Godfrey and the rest, erected Lydda, famous for Saint Georges Tombe, unto the dignity of an Episcopall See: Primitias laborum suorum, cum omni devotione, egregio martyri dedicantes, so consecrating with all due devotion, the first fruits of their labours, to that glorious Martyr. Which pious act of theirs, might have perhaps some reference to that assistance, which before hee brought them: as also might their calling of the Tower of the two Sisters, in the Citie of Antiochia, by the name of Saint Georges Tower, mentioned in the Turkish History. William of Malmesbury, who lived about the same time with Ro. Monachus; And I perswade my selfe had never seene this Story of the holy Warres, but learnt it rather from some who had commanded in that service: relateth also the same passage. For speaking of that slaughter, which beyond hope the Christian Army made of those that fought against them; he goes thus forwards. Persuadebantque sibi videre antiquos martyres, qui olim milites fuissent, quique mortis pretio parassent vita premia; Georgium dico & Demetrium (this Demetrius was Proconsul under Maximinian, by whom at last he was made a Martyr) vexillis levatis à partibus montanis accurrere: Iacula, in hostes, in se, auxilium vibrantes. "They verily beleueed (saith he) that they beheld those ancient

Lib. 5 cap. 2.

Lib. 7 cap. 22.

De gest. Angl.
Reg. 1. 4.

“ ancient Martyrs, which had once beene Souldiers, and “ were now possessed of glory, George viz. and Demetrius,
 “ to hasten from the Mountaines with displayed ensignes; “ casting their darts against the enemy, and succouring the “ Christians. Nor doth hee onely tell the story, but doth justify the truth of it; and prove the possibilitie. Nec diffien- dum est affuisse martyres Christianis, sicut quondam angelos Macchabais, simili dumtaxat causa pugnauitibus. For why (saith “ he) might not God send his Saints to assist the Christians,
 “ as once hee sent his Angell to assist the Macchabees; “ both fighting in the same quarrell? Doubtlesse the arme of God is never shortened, nor is his love unto the Christians, and his care of them, lesse than it was to them of Iewrie. That God which by an Angell destroyed that infinite Host of 100085. men, which besieged Hiernsalem; and by a noyse of Horse and Chariots in the Ayre, did raise another: might not he also doe as much in the defence of those, who fought against the enemies of their Redeemer? This might I say bee urged, to prove the probabilitie of that storie related in Robertus; if any would assume unto himselfe the office of a Proctour in it, which I will not. Let it suffice, that on this ground, the Christian world being in those times thoroughly possessed with the truth of it, Saint George became to be accounted a chiefe Patron of the affaires of Christendome: which was the matter to be shewed.

(7) If any shall conceive these stories of the apparitions of Saint George, rather to bee Poeticall than Historically,
 I will not much contend with him. What may be thought touching the apparition of the Saints departed, we shall see hereafter. But for the present, though I determine not, that it is simply Poeticall; yet certainly I dare resolve it to be such, as may bee made the ground of an excellent Poeme: if any darling of the Muses would vouchsafe to undertake it; Cui mens diuinior atque os magna locu- turum, For my part, rather to leade the way to others; than out of any hope to prove happy in this kinde my selfe;

selfe, I will make bold to venture on it, by way of try-all, and essay: Tanquam si placeat hic impetus, as hee in Petronius.

The battailes ready were to ioyne, when loe
Lord Godfrey eager to assaile the foe,
"Cheeres up his men. My valiant host, said he,
"Which haue thus long beene wed to victory;
"Be not this day diuor'd. Maintaine your right
"Got in so faire a loue, by this dayes fight.
"A day which if we win, we may secur'd
"From further Riualls, rest our sekues assur'd.
"Nor shall the haughty Persian ever dare
"To court her favours, or hereafter care
"How to disturbe us more: instructed right
"That we preuaile, as often as we fight.
"These forces overthrowne, and what are they
"Poore heartlesse men, borne onely to obey;
"Mistred in haste, neuer before in field,
"And brought of purpose, not to fight, but yeeld:
"These overthrowne, the way will open be,
"As well for us to win, as them to flee.
"Nothing to stay our march, till we see downe
"With a ll our troupes, before the Holy Towne:
"And then, how poor their sorts, how weak their powrs,
"To hinder, that the conquest be not ours.
"Hierusalem, the beauty of the East,
"More then all earthly habitations, blest;
"In thy dread Lord: how happy shall we bee
"When in thy glorious freedome we shall see,
"Where our Redeemer preach'd, and where he died;
"Where last he sapt, and where his cause was tried.

"Or

" Or see the Garden where he was betray'd;
" Or view the place in which the Lord was laid.
" Where we may see the Tropheies of our God;
" And kisse the sacred pavements where he trod.
" Thrice happy soules are we, whom he hath chose " To free those honour'd places from his foes:
" From them, which with unhallowed hands have made
" A gaine of Godlinesse; his tomb, a trade:
" And eyther force the pious soule away,
" Or sell him his devotions, make him pay.
" This is the cause, Christs cause; for which from farre
" We tooke the Crosse, and undertooke the warre.
" He leads us on, and he desires no more
" But we would doe as we have done before:
" That we would conquer still; which never yet
" Knew what it was to flie, or to submit,
" Advance then, be as forward to subdue
" His foes, for him; as he to die for you.
This said, the holy army kneeling downe,
With hands rear'd up; besought the Lord to crowne
The action with successe, to shew his might
In them, whose greatest strength was will to fight.
When straight a precious dew falls from above,
A timely signe of Gods regardfull love;
Upon the Host: which ready was before
To faint for drought, and now had moisture store.
" Refresh't with this, they cry amaine; why thus
" Doe we permit those dogs to barke at us?
" Why stand we still? Why make we not our way
" Upon the bellies of our foes, say they?
And saying so, as if anew inspired
With heavenly vigour, never to be tyred

In

*In length of fight, upon their foes they run :
 Each man an armie, in himselfe. Begun
 Is now the deadly mixture: brest to brest,
 The armies meet; and crest oppos'd to crest:
 As when two Rammes encounter on the Downes,
 Both fierce, and iealous both; their horned crownes
 They rudely mingle, and full fraught with ire,
 Each strives to make the other to retire :
 So they, thus met, and iustling face to face,
 Each seekes to force the other from his place.
 Oh who can tell the horror of that day;
 The groines, the deaths, the flights, the disaray
 Of either part: each in their turnes, oppress;
 Both reinforc'd, when they expected least.
 The Christians angry, that they now should finde Resistance; which did elswhere, like the winde, Sweepe all before them: stomach'd it the more,
 And prest upon them harder then before.
 See how Duke Robert, with his English bands,
 Even in the front of his Battallion stands :
 Grasping a Sword well tryed in many a iarre,
 And layes about him like the God of warre.
 More deaths he gives than stroakes; and yet his blowes
 Fall thicke, like stormes of baile upon his foes.
 How happy had he beene, if fighting thus,
 He had there dyed; and not return'd to us.
 See yonder, where Lord Godfrey roaves about
 In plates of seaven-fold steele, well arm'd throughtout.
 The soule of all the Campe; dispersing aide
 To all whose hearts were faint, or thoughts dismaid.
 What should I speake of noble Tancreds deeds;
 Of Eustace, Baldwin: or who both exceeds,*

of

Of warlike Bohemund; well knowne in field,
 And skill'd in all things, but to flie, and yeeld.
 Or what of Ademarc, whose onely words
 (His words were prayers) did more, then they with swords
 These raging thus, and every where the Plaine Cover'd with bloud, and heapes of Pagans flaine :
 Behold a fresh supply of Turkes, unseene, Vntouch't as yet; come fiercely rushing in.
 And as a Reaper in a field well growne,
 Doth with his hooke; so they with swords, cut downe
 All those which durst withstand: and so restore
 The fury of the day, even spent before.
 By this, the Christians weary waxt, and gan
 Fall of despaire to breake their ranks: each man Shifting to save himselfe, not thinking so
 To make the whole a prey unto the foe.
 Nor could their noble Leaders make them stay
 The hazard of the Warre.
 Which spied, the Pagans made a hideous sound;
 " And cried, downe with the, down unto the ground.
 " The day is ours: let us pursue the chase,
 " And spare no more the noble, than the base.
 There is a place, but farre above the skie,
 A place beyond all place; which mortall eye
 Never yet saw. A City all of gold,
 The walles of stones most precious to behold.
 The gates of pearle, each gate an entire masse:
 The streets of Chrystall, and transparant glasse.
 Where neither Sunne nor Moone doth shine: yet light
 Perpetuall there, a day without a night.
 Which, durst I be so bold, I might well call
 The Court of God, the King of Heavens White-Hall.
 S There

*There doth the Iudge of all the world, possesse
 His glorious throne in endlesse happinesse.
 His Saints and Angels, all, with one accord
 Chaunting the praises of the living Lord.
 Which, with eternall peace and comforts blest,
 Know but one ioy; yet are of all possess'd.
 And standing all before his presence, bee
 Equall in grace, though differing in degree.
 Here, all his Court about him, leaning on His dreadfull Scepter, in an higher throne
 Than all the rest: darknes his secret place,
 And watry Cloudes hiding his glorious face;
 He spake unto them thus. And as he spake,
 He made th'earth tremble, & the mountaines quake:
 His nostrhills smoakt; and thundring in his ire,
 Came from his mouth, bailestones and coales of fire.
 " See how (quoth he) the faithlesse folke begin " To advance their heads, as if they meant to win
 " The day, in spight of heaven: and would not know " That we, above, dispose of things below.
 " But sooner shall the Sunne forgoe his light,
 " And burie all the world in endlesse night:
 " Sooner the beauties of the earth shall wither,
 " And Parchment-like the Spheres rowl'd up together:
 " Than I will faile my people, or permit
 " Their foes to spoyle them, till they me forget:
 " Till they forget that God, who loves them best,
 " And wallow in these finnes, I so detest.
 " This I have said, and if I say the word,
 " It is for ever said: I am the Lord.
 " Goe then, prepare your selves, all you that were
 " Souldiers beneath, and now are sainted here:*

"Goe succour your allies; that they may say
"You can as well fight when they need, as pray.
"My word, you know, would bring them all to ground:
"Or by mine Angels, I could soone confound
"Them, and their pride at once; were they farre more "Than starres in heaven, or sands upon the shore.
"But this my pleasure is, this my decree:
"Yours be the service, mine the honour bee.

This said, the heavenly armies low inclin'd
At their Creators feet: and those assign'd
To this imployment, swiftly posted thence.
"The Saints chiefe vertue is obedience.
Behind they quickly left the CrySTALLINE;
And the eight Sphere, where the fix'd starres doe shine:
The severall orbes, in which the Planets move;
And in unequall courses, equall prove.
The Heavens thus past, and spreading all abroad,
Upon the wings of the swift windes they rode:
And gliding through the yeelding ayre; did light
Upon a Mountaine neere unto the fight.
There they dispos'd their ranks. Mauritius lead
The Theban Legion, all at once made dead;
Of which, himselfe the chiefe: Demetrius, those Who to great office and preferment rose.
The rest, of common quality, by lot Fell to Sebastian, who refus'd them not.
But yet the Chiefe, with supream power possess'd,
Was wanting; he that should command the rest:
Till by the common suffrage of them all,
They chose Saint George to be their Generall:
Saint George in feates of warre exactly tried,
Who liv'd a Souldier, and a Martyr died.

*A blessed Saint, that lost, and suffered more ;
 Than almost all the rest that went before.
 Things ordered thus, the Heavenly Souldiers flie, Swifter than thoughts upon the Enemie.
 And brandishing their flaming swords, make way
 For the damn'd soules, to leave their walles of clay.
 So fast they fell, that wearied Charon roord
 For helpe, to waite them o're the Stygian foord.
 And Pluto fear'd, their numbers were so great,
 They came to dispossesse him of his seate.
 In which distrust he rung the Larum-bell ;
 Never before afraid to lose his Hell.
 Amaz'd the Persians stood, to see their men
 Fall downe in heapes, there where no eye could ken
 An enemy at hand : for well they knew
 The Christians either fled, or backwards drew.
 As Niobe, a fruitfull mother late,
 When she beheld her sonnes untimely fate ; (swang,
 And viewed their wounds, and heard the bow strings
 Yet could not see from whence the mischief came :
 Stiffe with amazement, stood astonish'd ; and Doth, still a marble, in that posture stand :
 So they confounded stood ; except, that none
 So happy was, as to be made a stone.
 Their ranks are broke, their Chieftaines slaughtered
 But how, or by what hand, they could not see. (bec;
 Meane while th' Almighty from above the skye,
 Vpon the Earth bent downe his gracious eye :
 And saw his sacred troopes, now ready bent
 To execute their Soveraigne Lords intent.
 „ Which scene, he Michael call'd. Michael, said hee „ Thou know'st how I committed unto thee*

„ The

„ The safety of my flocke ; next under him,
 „ Who with his precious blood did it redeeme.
 „ How I elected thee, this stile to have,
 „ The Angell Guardian of the Church : and gave „ Thee, power above the rest, my Lambs to keepe,
 „ And cast the Dragon downe into the deepe.
 „ Goe thou unto the Christian host ; take thence „ That cloud of flesh, with which their mortall sense
 „ Is darkened and obscur'd ; that so they may „ Behold the glorious wonders of this day :
 „ And for a space, the light of Heaven sustaine ;
 „ And see my Saints, and view my armies, plaine:
 At his Creatours feet, with reverence due
 The Angell bowed : and swift as lightning flew
 To doe the businesse by his Lord assign'd ;
 Spreading his golden feathers to the wind.
 Approaching neere the host, he straight fulfill'd.
 His Makers pleasure : as the Lord had will'd,
 He did away the clouds which dimm'd their sight,
 And let them see the heavenly armies fight
 In their defence : and his dispatch so done,
 He fix'd his wings, and stood a looker on.
 By this, the almost vanquish'd Christians heard
 A tumult in the adverse host : yet fear'd
 To turne againe, or learne what it might meane, Vntill the dreadfull noise grew more extreame.
 At last they made a stand, and fac'd about,
 And saw the Pagan army all in rout :
 Their troopes dispers'd, their colours fall to ground,
 And with dead bulks the fields all cover'd round.
 And first they thought some former strife renew'd
 Had made their hands with their owne blood embrew'd :

Or that they saw the Christian troopes recoyle,
 And thought them lost, and quarrell'd for the spoyle;
 Thus they, for how could mortall man suppose,
 That God had arm'd his Saints, against his foes!
 When suddainly, their fancies thus perplex;
 Appears a Comment which explain'd the Text:
 Their eyes, but how they knew not, opened were;
 Their sight before obscur'd, was now growne cleere:
 So cleere and piercing, that they durst abide
 To brave the Sunne in his full height of pride;
 And saw, at noone, the starres where fixt they be,
 As if their eyes had brighter beames, than he.
 Lifting their pious heads up to the skie,
 As men amaz'd to see the orbes so nie;
 They straight espied, what least they thought to finde,
 The glorious Angell hovering in the wind.
 And not farre off, the Saints, those blessed brights,
 (Ah how could sinfull man deserve such sights!)
 Raging with bloodied swords, in their defence;
 All arm'd in white, the robe of innocence.
 As the Disciples full of care and dread;
 In their Lords death, themselves as good as dead;
 When they beheld him entred in the place,
 Where they all stood; and viewed his sacred face,
 And heard his voyce, (never was voyce so sweet)
 Warbling this note, Behold my hands and feet;
 Belcevd not yet, their joyes were so extreame,
 But thought it was a vision, or a dreame:
 So stood the Christian troopes; and did not know,
 Whether the things they saw, were true, or no.
 At last, thus Ademaie: Behold (he said)
 The host of Heaven assembled in our aid;

Legi-

„ Legions of Saints, by their Creatours will „ Sent downe to helpe us from his Holy Hill ;
 „ Avenging us upon our foes, this day ;
 „ As once the starres fought against Sisera.
 „ See how Saint George, the Captaine of the rest, „ Never in such a charge before, so blest ;
 „ See how he leades them on : how in one hand
 „ With wondrous strength he shakes his flaming brand ;
 „ And in the other, valiantly doth wield,
 „ The colours of the Saints ; a silver Feild „ Charg'd with a bloody Crosse ; and this the Word,
 „ The deare remembrance of our dying Lord.
 „ See how the Heavenly Legions following close „ Vpon their Leader, execute their foes :
 „ What slaughter they have made upon the Plaine,
 „ How many millions of the foes are slaine :
 „ But see, blest Souldiers see, the Saints have wonne
 „ A glorious day ; and backe to Heaven are gone.
 They lookt, and saw all true as he had sed,
 The Saints departed, and the Pagans fled ;
 And would have plyed the chase, but Ademaere,
 Told them the time was fitter farre for prayer.
 So downe upon the ground themselves they flung,
 And made a Temple, of the field ; and sung
 Te deum to their God, upon the place :
 Sing Souldiers, sing ; sing Souldiers, sing a pace.
 For since the Angels caroll'd, credit mee ;
 Never had men more cause to sing, than yee.

(8) But to proceed, these the miraculous apparitions of Saint Georgeto the Christian Armies, being then generally beleev'd: as certainly there is small reason why the reporters, any of them, should be suspected to invent them: exceedingly advanced the reputation of the Saint, in these later times, among the people. Which being so, and that he antiently had his proper time and place of commemoration, and still continueth them, both in the East, and Westerne Churches: and that they both have beene exceeding carefull of him, in all those waies and means, whereby the memory of the Martyrs hath beene preserved; we may as firme with confidence, that he was more generally honored through out all Christendome, then any other Saint, whoever. And sure it were exceeding strange that it should be so: if either hee had never beene, as Calvin thinkes; or were a bloody hereticke, as Doctor Reynolds would persuade us. Baronius tells us that this Saint is very famous in the Countries of Galatia: more generally Vicelinus. Celebratus D. Georgij apud Græcos perquam est & præ cæteris eximia; that he is honoured, more then any of the rest, amongst the Greekes. Which words of George Vicelinus, I have heard made good, by some, who not unprofitably, have tooke the paines to view those Countries. The attributes of εὐδξθ, μεγαλομάρτυρθ, θαυματουργός, ἑσπαιός, Given to him in the publicke monuments and records in the Easterne Churches, were prooffe enough of this, should men conceale it. Adde hereunto that Hærax, one of great power in the Greeke Empire, upon his reconciliation with the Emperour Constantinus, against whom before hee was suspected to conspire; gave him in token of his future faith and loyalty, Saint George his picture: Imaginem præclari Mart. Christi, Georgij, fidei sue, sincereque erga Imperatorem voluntatis, pignus quoddam dedit. But afterwards continuing in his treasons, hee was fought with by the Emperours forces, ~~would~~ and taken prisoner: the emperour bidding that hee should consider with himselfe, ne forte Georgius Christi Martyr. &c. whether Saint George, whom he had called false

Hist. l. 3. c. 98

wounded

called to witnesse for him, and in a manner made his surety; had not now given him over, to bee soiled and wounded for his falshood and disloyalty. The thing related by the Emperour Constantinus himselfe, in his booke of Histories, first published under the name of Christodulus. As for the Church of Rome, there is no question to be made of her good affection. Her Missals, and her testimony of him in the Martyrology, expressly say it. Nor need there any more be added, unlesse perhaps it be worth noting, that Vergorius Bishop of Iustinople in the Seigneurie of Venise, was called in question for his life: Eo quod in Concilio Trident. Georgij Legendam sibi non per omnia probari ostenderet, as Chemnitzius hath it; because he had declaimed against some passages of the Story of Saint George, in the Trent Council. And for the Churches Protestant, wee finde the Lutheran Doctors many of them very favourable to the cause; some also amongst the Calvinists, and those no meane ones: and how we stand affected to him, here in England; wee shall see hereafter. Compare all this, with that which followeth in the next Chapter, touching the honors done unto him, publickly and by persons of most eminence, and tell me, if in the Calendar, there be any Saint, of what name so ever, in honouring of whom there is so generall an agreement of all parties, in all times and ages. And howsoever some few men of late have quarrelled him, and laboured what they could to explode his History: yet even that opposition doth conduce to his greater glory; just as the Sunne when it breaketh through a Cloud, doth shine more brightly. Nor doe I doubt, but as Saint George, still keepes his place in the Heaven of glories, amongst the spleene or stomacke of curious and unquiet men: so hee will bee againe, as high in our opinion, as in the times before us, most affected to his memorie.

(3) To goe a little further yet. It will be found upon good searche that not the Christians only, have had Saint George in speciall honour: but even the rude and bare

Contr. Mahom.
lib. 4

barbarous Turkes, seeing how much hee was esteemed, conceive a like opinion of him. Constantinus once Emperour of Constantinople, informes us, that the Mahometans doe highly honour him; (Ος χ' παρ αυτων Μουσουλμανων τιμαται, as he hath it) and that they call him Cheter Eliax. Babequius assures us this, and wichall hath told vs, Monachos Turcicos, quos Dervis vocant, insignem eo loco habere eadem de heres. quod m, &c. How that the Dervises, which are a kind of Turkish Monkes, have a great Temple dedicated to his honour at Thoke Thiby, not farre from Amase the chiefe Towne of Cappadocia. So in the Turkish Historie, we reade that they have in Caire of Egypt, a Temple dedicated to Saint Barbara, and another to Saint George, which two (saith Knales in the life of Selimus) amongst those Nations are of great fame. Nay more, it is related by Catovicus, that most of them in their returne from Alacha, whither they goe on pilgrimage to their Prophet Mahomet, use to call in at Ladda, admirand (Saint Georges Church there) devotionis ergo non recusant, &c. Es Martyris Sepulchrum venerantur: (saith my Author) and going to his Church, make their devotions there, and adore his Sepulcher. The Turkes had heard the Christians in the wars of the Holy Land, make many a brave relation of that miraculous assistance, which by Saint George had bene so often brought unto them; and somewhat they were able to testifie in this kind themselves. That of it selfe sufficient, to breed in them a reverent opinion of our blessed Martyr: which having entertained, and giving him the name of Chedorle, or Cheter Eliax, as the Graccians expresse it: they ascribed also to him such achievements, some of them, not all; which were reported of Saint Georges. And as it seemes, finding by conference with the Christians of the Westerne parts; how that our Martyr was ennobled for the killing of a Dragon, and freeing of a dainty Damofell exposed to slaughter; they also must impute the like unto their Chedorle (for so they call him commonly, whether corruptedly or no: for Cheter Eliax, I cannot tell.) This witnesseth Babequius also, who having told us that the Dervises affirmed their their Chederle to be our Saint George; addes, that they have imputed to him such performances, which we ascribe unto the Saint: and in particular, Vasti mirum & horrendi Draconis cadi expositam Virginem servasse. So high was the esteeme, had of him in the Christian Church; that it prevailed also among Turkes and Infidels.

Idid.

CHAP.

CHAP. VIII.

- (1) The honour done by Kings to others, of what reckoning.
 (2) Arguments used by the Jewes, in defence of their Temple of Hierusalem. (3) Of Monasteries dedicated to Saint George. (4) Saint Georges Canons: a Religious order. (5) Saint George, by what Kings honoured anciently, as the chiefe Saint of Soulaerie. (6) Of honours done to him in the Greeke Empire, and amongst the Muscovites. (7) The militia-rie order of Saint George in Austria. (8) The German or Dutch Order, called Sanct Georgen Schilts. (9) Saint Georges banke in Genoa. (10) And his band in Italie. (11) The Georgians why so called: and of the honour done by them to our Martyr. (12) A view of severall places denominated of Saint George. (13) A recollection of the Arguments before used, in the present businesse.

(I)

He ground thus layed, wee now proceed unto those publike honours, which have beene done unto our Martyr, by the Kings and Princes of the earth: of which, some of them, as before I said, reflect upon him, onely as a Saint in generall; some, as the principall Saint or Guardian of the military men; and others, as an especiall Patron of the affaires of Christendome. With these, we shall upon occasion, intermingle such honours also, as have beene afforded to him, by some few Patriarkes and Prelates, Princes Ecclesiasticall, chiefe Rulers of their severall Churches, Which we shall doe the rather, that so the pious actions of the King and civill Magistrate, may be abetted by the faire example of the Prelates: & the devout performances of the Prelates, may be defended by the power & countenance of their Sovereigne Princes. A matter questionlesse of chiefe importãce to the busines now in hand: the soveraign Prince, as he alone is the original of civill honour, & politicall nobilitie; so also not a little to be regarded, in his demeanor towards thole above, whom he may honor, though he cannot make them honourable. We take it kindly, when those of lower quality, give us that worship and respect that is due unto us: but if we finde an extraordinary regard at the hands of those to whom the Lord hath made us subject; we then conceive our selves to be upon the very top and pinnacle of all worldly happinesse. It was a greater honour unto Ioseph, that Pharaoh tooke a ring from his owne hand, and put it upon Iosephs, arrayed him in vestures of fine linnen, and put a gold chaine about his necke; than if the whole, united suffrages of the common people had decreed, to cry before him, bow the knee. More also did it adde to the esteeme of Daniel, that the great Emperour of the East, gaue him the name of Béltesassar, according to the name of one of his especiall Gods: Than if that all his Subiects had studied to adorne him with the most glorious attributes that possibly the wit of man could haue invented. For if according unto Aristotles affirmation, Honour is rather seated in those which give it, then in them that doe receive it; (Τὴν δὲ δόξαν ἐν τοῖς μῶνι μᾶλλον ἢ ἐν τοῖς τιμωμένοις.) Then certainly by how much greater and more excellent, the party is, who doth respect or honour us; by so much more may we conceive, that we are honoured and respected. For which cause, when Abasuerus proposed this question unto Haman, What shall be done unto the man whom the King delighteth to honour: That proud and haughty Favourite conceived it rightly, that possibly a greater favour could not be done unto a Subject: and therefore concluded in his owne heart, thus; To whom should the King delight to doe honour, more than to my selfe? so highly raised and settled in his good opinion. A false conclusion, though the premises were true; I meane the Maier or the Proposition, as they call it. Popular spirits
 of

Gen. 41. v. 42.

V. 43.

Dan. 4. 8.

Ethic. 1. 1. c. 5.

Hest. ch. 6. v. 6.

are carried commonly about with popular reports; and like a flocke of silly sheepe, are prone to take that way, which any better than themselves have laid before them. But Kings have Kingly mingly mindes, and use not to rely upon uncertaine rumours: more likely to deny respects, where they may be challenged, then to conferre them upon those that have not truly merited.

*Antiq. Iud. l. 13.
6.7.*

(2) How much the honour done by Kings, ought to be valued; we may perceiv in that which is related by Iosephus, touching the Temple of Hierusalem. Those of Samaritan, and some Schismatickes of lewrie with them, had built themselves a Temple on Mount Garizim: which Temple they contended, before Ptolomis Philometor, King of Egypt, to be more ancient and more orthodoxe, then that so celebrated by the Jewes. A question hereupon arising; Andronicus a learned man, and religious Jew, tooke on him the defence of the true Temple, as Advocate for those of Judah: against Sabbas and Theodosius, Proctors for the Samaritanes. The day of hearing come, and Ptolomis in presence; Andronicus had licence granted by his Adversaries; first, to proceed unto his proofes: themselves not yet resolved, so it appeared, what might bee said in their owne quarrell. He did so, and he proved his cause by three sorts of arguments: first, from the letter of the Law; then from the constant and continuall succession of the high Priests; and lastly, that the Kings of Asia had vouchsafed to honour it with many costly presents, and rich offerings. Τὸ δὲ Σαλβαίου καὶ Θεοδοσίου συζήτουσάντων πρὸς Ἀνδρόνικον περὶ τοῦ πύθουσαι τοῦ λόγου· ἤρξατο ὁ ἄποδείξαι ἐν τῷ νόμῳ, καὶ ὅτι διαδοχῶν ὅτι ἀρχιερέων, &c. Καὶ ὅτι πάντες οἱ ἐν Ἀσίᾳ βασιλεῖς τοῖς ἱεροῖς ἀνέθεσαν καὶ λαμβανέτωσαν δωρεὰς. So farre the storie. The application of it, this. Wee have already verified the cause of our Saint George, although not from the letter of the Law it selfe; yet from the practise of the Church, which is the fairest Commentarie that was ever made upon that letter: and wee have proved it, from the succession of so many severall Authors, most of them Priests, and other publike publike Monuments of antiquitie; which since his time, the severall ages of the Church successively haue given us. It now remaineth, that we make mention of those honours which have beene done unto him, by the Princes of the most parts of Christendome: That so there may be nothing wanting, by which Saint George may be restored unto his honour, and his Historie asserted. The issue of the former businesse was this: that those of counsell for the Schismarickes and Samaritans, had nothing to reply; and so the sentence was pronounced in favour of the Lewes. Our method is the same, our evidence as faire, our proofs as pregnant: and therefore wee presume of equall favour, in the judgement. Namque aquum reor (as Tullie hath it) ut qui Ora pro. M. in eadem causa fuerunt, in eadem etiam essent fortuna. Marcello.

(3) And first, not to say any thing of that which hath beene said already, or shall be said hereafter, touching those Churches, which by severall Kings and Princes have beene erected to his Honour: We will begin with those particulars, of this last ranke of proofes, which come most neare it; and which reflect upon him onely as a Saint. Of this kinde are those many Monasteries and houses of religious persons, which have beene founded partly to, his honour, and dedicated by his name. The first of which, that built by Hildericus, King of Lorraine, or Austrasia, Anno 660. founded Ad desertam locam montis Vosagi, the mountainous parts of the Province of Alsacia: and dedicated to the blessed Virgin, the two Apostles, Saint Peter and Saint Paul, and to Saint George. Fundavit ibi (saith the learned and iudicious Cosmograph. l. 3. Munster) Hildericus Rex Austrasie, Anno 660. monasterium & Abbatiam ordinis S. Benedicti, in honorem gloriose virginis Mariae & Apostolorum Petri & Pauli, atque S. Georgij. Yet notwithstanding, that such and so many blessed spirits were joyned with him in the dedication, it seemeth that the greatest honour of it was conferred upon Saint George: the whole adjoyning country being called Saint Georges valley. Lib. 3. p. 389. Vnde et locus ille atque vallis, vocatus est vallis S. Georgij, as that Author hath it. We read also in the same Munster, of two other

De orig. Mon.
l. 3. cap. 15.

Comp. Hist.
p. 650.
De officialib.
Constantin.

other Monasteries of that order, entituled by his name, and both in Germany, but the time of the foundation not specified: one of them built by the Lord of Deggernow, the other, by one William, the Abbot of some other Convent of the same order. The second Monasterie which we meet with, dedicated unto Saint George, is that in Venice, erected (as Hospinian tells us) by Tribunus Mevius, once Duke of that State and Citie, Anno 975. In which Hospinian also, and the same booke of his, we finde Saint Georges Abbey, an house of Benedictine Monkes, founded about the yere 996. by the most excellent Princeesse Hedinge, Dutchesse of Bavaria, Anno 1005. ab Henrico secundo Steinam transfatus, &c. Which after, in the yere 1005. was by the Emperour Henry of that name the second, translated from those unpeopled mountaines where before it was, and settled in Steinberg, a Towne of Saxia. Another of Saint Georges Abbeys we reade of also in the same Author, founded at Aufbourg, a principall Citie of those parts of Germany, by Walter, Bishop of that Citie, Anno 1142. Another of chiefe note erected by Constantinus Monomachus, (he began his Empire, Anno 1043. at a place called Mangan, not farre from Constantinople, where he afterwards was buried, Μοναστήριον ὁδοπομεῖ ὁ βασιλεὺς, καὶ τὰ λατρεῖα Μαργαρίτα, ἐν ὀνόματι τοῦ ἀγίου μαρτύρου ὁ Γεωργίου, saith George Cedrenus. Looke on Codinus, and you shall finde in him that the succeeding Emperours used alwaies on Saint Georges festiuall to goe in solemne precession eis τὴν σεβαστήριον μόνην τοῦ Μαργαρίτου, unto this Monasterie, and this onely. But to returne to the westerne parts, we finde one more of them at Bolling, in the Dukedome of Bavaria, a third in Tours, founded by Jeffrey, Earle of Anjou, who lived about the times of the Norman Conquerour. We also reade in the life of Anno, Archbishop of Colen, anno 1000. or thereabouts, that in the suburbs of that Citie, he built a beautifull Temple to Saint George the Martyr, endowed with large revenues for the maintenance of secular Priests, Unde contractis copijs (saith the Monke of Sigeborge) S. Georgij Martyris Ecclesiam extra murum construxit, annis rebus abundanter, iuxta quod exigebat congregatio illic illic facta Clericorum. Those of his Church especially, as generally all of Colen, doe solemnize Saint Georges day (as I am given to understand) with a most stately forme of going in Procession, full of magnificent pompe, and externall reverence. And yet not Europe onely hath beene thus devoted to Saint Georges memory: for in the booke entituled Les estats du Monde, wee finde a notable and magnificent Monasterie of Saint George, on the bankes of Nile in Egypt, fixe miles from Memphis, wherein there were no lesse then 200. Monkes, a large Convent. avec une signalee commodité des passans, qui y estoient receux et traitez courtoisement, to the great benefit of Pilgrims, which were there courteously entertained. But now it is, and, as he tels us, hath beene long abandoned: the Monkes about 150. yeres, and upwards, being all wasted with a plague, and no new Colonie sent to plant it.

(4) Nor did the fruitfull devotion of those times, employ it self only in consecrating houses of Religious persons by his name, & to his memory: but sometimes the religious folke themselves, were dedicated to his name, and wore his livery. Of this kinde were S. Georges Canons, an order of new Regulars, founded at Venice: called by the Cardinall in his Chronologic, Ordo S. Georgij de Alga, by Pol. Virgil, Canonici D. Georgij in Alga. The founder of them, Laurentius Iustinianus, a Venetian by birth, and the first Patriarch of that City: famous a long time, doctrina, sanctitate, & miraculis, for learning, sanctitie, and miracles. Borne in the yeere 1381. and at the first a Canon Regular, as they use to call them, in opposition to those Canons which had forgot their name, and became S. cular. Anno 1426 made Bishop of Venice, and after by Pope Nicholas the fifth, created as before I said, the first Patriarch of that Citie, anno 1450. in which great dignity he continued five yeres longer, and then dyed. By Bellarmino, the institution of this order, is referred ad annum 1410. when hee was yet a private man: no lesse then sixteene yeres before his consecration. Pol. Virgil acquaints us with the founder of these new Regulars, in which the Cardinall is silent; but tels us De irrecent v. usum, lib. 7. c. 3.

Bellarmino in Script. Eccl.

Id. in Chronologia.

T

nothing

Platins.

Hospin. de orig.
Monac. l. 6. c. 47

nothing of the time; and adds withall, that their habit is of blew or watchet. Canonici D. Georgii in Alga (saith he) *Venetiis à Laurentio Iustiniano instituti, carneo vinctus habitu. Eugenius Pope of Rome, of that name the 4. hee which did call the Florentine Councell to compose the differences betwixt Rome & Greece, was as I take it, of the first foundation of this new Order: Canonicus Congregationis S. Geor. in Alga, as my Author hath it. I say of the foundation of this new Order, for so it seemes: this order being founded, as before is said, Anno 1410. and he promoted to the Papedom, Anno 1431. Hospinius mentioneth two later broodes, of the same name and order, of which the one, Candidus plane est, is distinguished by their white habit; the other, Extra Monasterium atrii coloris chlamydem assumit, is apparelled all in blacke. They are obliged to no profession. Their Order, I meane that founded by Iustinian, was ratified by Iohn the 22. or as Balans, by Gregory the twelfth.*

Pilgrim. l. 3. c. 15

Hist. Longob. l. 6.
c. 17

(5) In the next place, we are to looke upon the honors done unto our Martyr, as superstitiously conceived to be the Patron of the military men: the fighting Saint, as Master Purobar, though little reverently, calls him: Rogus enim in militari consuetudine S. Georgium invocare solent, &c. For that the greatest Princes used antiently to call upon Saint George in the day of Battaille, Baronius labours to make good by two examples: the one of Unibert, a King of Lombardie, the other of Nicephorus, an Emperour of Constantinople. Whether these instances doe prove sufficiently, the matter to be verified; we shall best see by looking on them: though I must needs say, that in the first, there is small hope of standing much, to the purpose, Paulus Diaconus, who lived about the yeere 774. principall Seceretary of State to Desiderius King of the Lombards; reports it of King Unibert, one of the Kings of that Nation: that in a place, where he had formerly vanquished the Alabis, a barbarous people, hee built a Monastery to the honour of Saint George. In campo Coronata, ubi bellum contra Alabis gessit, in honorem Beati Georgii,

Georgij Monasterium construxit, saith the Author: Where by the way it is to be observed, That in the late Edition of this Author by Gruterus, we read not Georgij, but Gregorij; (which also is the error of the new Editions of Platina, as before I noted:) but yet he tells us in his Annotations, that the old bookes read it Georgij; himselfe, none of S. Georges friends, it seems, not willing so to have it longer. Which brings into my mind, that memorable saying of old Timon: Who being asked by Aratus, how he might get the works of Homer in the best Edition: returned this answer; that he must make enquiry after the most ancient Copies, and not for those which were last corrected. Τὸν δὲ εἰπὼν (saith Dionæus Laertius.) εἰ τοῖς ἀρχαίοις ἀντιγράφοις ἐρευνῶμαι, οὐ μὴ τοῖς ἰνδὶ διαφθαρτοῖς. But for a finall prooffe, that George not Gregory was the Saint, to whom King Cunibert did erect and found this Monastery; Baronius tells us, that it is generally conceived to be that faire and ancient Abbey, Vetusissimum illud et nobis admodum, in the Suburbs of Ferrara, even unto this day called Saint Georges. Which as it is in Rensner, Basil. Genealog. was repaired, or rather new built afterward by Almericus the first Marquess of Ferrara: who died about the yeere 949. Whether this passage of this Longobardian King, may bee sufficient prooffe for this, that hee did call upon Saint George in the day of Battaille; is next to be examined. For my part, I beleeve it cannot; though the particular circumstance of the place where, might unto one which were contentious so to have it, administer an argument of possibility. My reason is, because this Cunibert beganne his raigne over the Lombards, Anno 608. And I perswade my selfe, that in those early dayes, this superstitious invocation of Saint George, as a chiefe Advocate of Victory, was not in fashion. Let it suffice, that though it proove not thoroughly what Baronius did intend: yet, is prooffe sufficient, that Saint George was specially honoured among the Lombards, as a Saint of more than common note; which is as much as I endeavour to make from it. But for the next that followeth the instance of Nicephorus, surnamed Phocas, mistaken by the Cardinall for Iohn Tsemisce, the prooffe as I conceive it, is faire and pregnant: delivered thus by Ge,, orgius Cedrenus, in his Compendium Historiarum. This

 ,, Iohn Tsemisces, (he began his Empire in the yeere 970.)
 ,, had entred in a warre against the Rossi, a Scythian or ,, Sarmatian people bordering on his Empire: with whom ,, encountring upon Saint Georges day, hee gave them a ,, memorable Overthrow. And then it followeth; Ο δὲ βασιλεὺς τὰ θηνίγια δούσας τῷ καλλινίκῳ μάρτυρι Γεωργίῳ (ὃν ὁ χρὶ τῷ αὐτῷ μνήμῳ σὺρρῶζε τοῖς πολεμίοις) τῇ ἐπιση, &c. Id est.

Edit. G. Lat. p.
 § 56.

,, The Emperour having payed his vowes unto the most ,, victorious Martyr Saint George, upon whose Festivall he ,, had discomfitted his enemies; went the next morning
 ,, with his Army, unto Dorefulum. The Greeke Phrase, τὰ θηνίγια δοῦν, used in the Author; is found often in De- mofthenes, and other Writers of those more elegant times, of the Greeke language: with whom it signifieth, Sacrifica- cere ob partam victoriam, to sacrifice unto those Gods after the victory, whose favour they implored before it. I have here rendred it, the payment of his Vowes, more proper to the use and meaning of the word, in the Christian Church:
 the meaning of the whole passage being this, that hee had vowed some speciall honour to Saint George, τῷ καλλινίκῳ μάρτυρι, as he there calls him, in case hee should obtaine the victory: which afterwards, according to the tenour of his vow, he did religiously performe. The so much celebrated Iulius Scaliger, much to this purpose, though rather in the generall, then upon any one particular occasion: in his Poemata de Divis, thus poetizeth on our Martyr.

Hac vita magno pro munere, Divus Georgi

Parva sed ex animo, munera Caesar obit.

Hostili toties, qui jam mucrone perfoxe, retuso

Accepto nullo vulnere, victor abiit.

Nullum opus humanum hoc potuit, sed vindice dextra,

Magne tua; nostra hac dextera tanta fuit.

For no lesse blessing then his life, to thee
 Saint George, doth Cesar offer willingly
 These small oblations. Oft did he confound
 His enemies trooes; himselve without a wound.
 Not by the helpe of man, but by the powers;
 Which strengthened and confirm'd these hands of ours,

(6) In our last sort of evidence which is next to follow, we must reflect upon Saint George, as a chief patron of the affaires of Christendome; and of particular States and Kingdomes in the Christian world: though even in some of these we may consider him as a cheife patron also of the men of warre. And first, beginning with the East, diverse particulars there are, which easily may perswade us, that Saint George was held in more then ordinary honour by the Greeke Emperours; if they esteemed him not the Tutelary Saint and Guardian also of their Empire. The Emperour, amongst many other solemne passages at his coronation, using to goe into the great hall of his Royall Pallace, and taking up his station, ἐν ᾧ τίτω ἡ εἰκὼν δεξιᾷ τοῦ μεγάλου μάρτυρος Γεωργίου, neere to the Image of Saint George, doth scatter diverse sorts of Coyne amongst the people. And when his name and titles use to bee solemnly proclaimed, which onely is upon the Feast of Christs Nativity, and Baptisme (which is our Epiphany;) Ἰσαυτὸς ἐμπαροῦσεν τὴν παναγίαν θεοτόκον τὴν Νικοπολίαν ὅπου ἡ τοῦ ἁγίου Γεωργίου δεξιὴ εἰκὼν: he celebrates it in the Temple of the blessed Virgin, surnamed Ni. opca, or the giver of Victory, where is the Image of Saint George also. Adde hereunto, that whereas in the solemnization of the Feast of Christmasse, there are twelve banners, six on each side, borne about the Emperour at the evening service: the 4. on each side (for on each side they beare the same) ἔχει τὸν ἅγιον Γεώργιον ἑφιππὸν, hath on it the full portraiture of Saint George on horse-backe, I know that some descendants of the late Greeke Emperours, pretend to bee the soveraignes of an order dedicated to him, partly religious and

G. Codinus de official. Const.

Id. ib.

Id. ib.

adit.

cap. 17.

and partly military ; said to bee instituted, first by Constantine, revived by Heraclius, and since continued in that Empire: of which I cannot finde any sure foundation wheron to build. I would not gladly lose so faire a testimony for the assurance of my cause, if it might bee justified, by any antient monument or approved Author : which till I can incounter with, I must leave as doubtfull, if not fabulous. Therefore for this time leaving the Greeke Empire, let us next passe for Muscovy : which people, as they received the Christian faith from the Church of Greece, so probably they received that honorable opinion, which they carry of Saint George, from them also. For of that State and people, it is reported by Doctor Giles Fletcher, in his description of that Country ; that for their ensigne they doe use the Image of Saint George, as the Georgians doe : of which her-„ after: And that if any Souldier valiantly behaves him„ selfe and doth any notable service, the Emperour doth „ use to send him a piece of gold stamped with the Image „ of Saint George on horsebacke, which they hang in their „ sleeves, or set in their Caps : and this is thought the „ greatest honour that they can receive for any service „ which they doe.

Annal. Austr.
Anno 1245

Edit. Paris p.
1464

(7) From Muscovy and the Easterne Empire, wee will proceede unto the Westerne. And therein first we find that Frederick Duke of Austria, upon Saint Georges day, Anno 1245. made 200. Knights, of the most brave and hopefull men in his whole dominions, Centum & quadraginta juvenes de terra sua nobiles, donavit honorifice gladio & cingulo militari ; as my Author hath it. And why upon Saint Georges day, unlesse to shew that he esteemed Saint George, the President and chiefe Patron of his Souldiery. But of that kind of honour more especially was that military order of Saint George in Austria, first instituted by Rodolphus Habsburgensis Emperour of Germany, and first Duke of Austria of that family ; for the defence of Hungaria, Styria, and Carinthia. The Author Des Estats du Monde thus hath it. Rodolphe de Habsburg (he began his Empire Anno 1273) Pour defendre defendre la Hongrie, la Syrie, (he meanes Styria) & la Carinthie, contre les armes des Turcs, Institua l'Ordre de Saint George, &c. He also tells us, that he gave unto the Master of it, a Towne of Carinthia, well built and situate, for his ordinary Seate: together with the Toparchie of Cranichberge, Trautmandorfe, Scharfeneich, and S. Patoville, for the revenue and maintenance of the Order. As also how he permitted the fellowes of it, La Croix rouge de S. George. dans les Armoiries de leurs maisons; to beare S Geor. crosse in their own armes, the armes belonging their houses. In most of this we may beleeve him: but where he tells us that this institution was intended Contre les armes des Turcs, against the forces of the Turke; in this we must be bold to tell him, that hee is deceived. For in these times the Turkish Kingdome was suppressed and ruined by the Tartars: nor had they ever any footing in the Continent of Europe, untill the yeere 1358. when under the conduct of Solyman the sonne of Orchanes, they surpris'd Calipolis in Thrace.

(8) In imitation of this Order, Frederick the third, Emperour of the Germans, and Duke of Austria, instituted the Order of Saint Georgen Schiltz: if at the laest, as Bernard of Luxembourg conceives, it were not rather a restitution of the former Order, then decayed. Of which thus Stumpfius in his History of the Switzers, Anno 1448. Casar Fredericus communem fecit in Suevia pacem, omnium Ordinum Lib. 13. c. 21 confederatione, qua vocabatur Saint Georgen Schiltz. Nam omnes qui in ea comprehendebantur debebant portare clypeum S. Georgij, modo ex Nobilitate essent. The Emperour Fredericke (saith he) Anno 1448. established a firme Peace and League in Schwaben by a confederacy of all the States together. Which Order, had the name of Saint Georgen Schiltz: because it was permitted unto such as were comprehended in it, to beare an Escutcheon of Saint George in their owne armes, (so I conceive it,) if they were nobly descended. Forty yeeres after, a new League and Confederacy was set on foote, under the old name, but for ten yeeres onely; at the request of Maximilian, sonne to the former part 3. l. 9. c. 1.

Annal. Suevic.

Frederick, and afterwards his successor in the German Empire: the most potent of the Princes and Imperiall Cities, being contained in it. Anno 1488. (saith Martin Crusius) Suevi impulsu Maximiliani ob inuendam mutuam pacem & quietem, fecerunt quoddam Noriberge inuentum inter se decennale, fœdus dictum (typi Georgiana societati: in quo fœdere potentissimi quique Principes, non modò ciuitates Imperij fuerunt. So he.

Lib. 8.

(9) We must now crosse the Alpes, and make over into Italie, where we shall finde Saint George to be conceived as great a Patron of the Common-wealth of Genoa, as of the peace of Germanie. For as the Germans were secured from warres without, and civill broyles within, by the confederacie and order of Saint Georges Shields: so are the Genoese protected, and the ancient dignity of that State preserved by Saint Georges Banke or Treasurie. The first beginnings of which Banke of Treasurie, and the administration thereof, together with that benefit which redounds thereby unto the publike: take here, according as it is related by that great Statesman, Machiavell in his History of Florence. Post diuturnum illud bellum quod Genuenses multis ab hinc annis cum Venetis gessere, cum pace iam inter eas reipub. constituta, Genuenses civibus suis ob as in bello conceditum, satisfacere non possent, &c. After that tedious warre betweene the Genoese and the Venetians was now ended, anno 1381. and the Genoese perceived themselves unable to repay those monies, which they had taken up of their private Citizens, for the maintaining of the warre: they thought it best to assigne over to them, their ordinarie taxes, that so in tract of time, the whole debt might be satisfied, and for that purpose allotted them a common Hall, there to deliberate and determine of their affaires. These men thus made the masters of the publike Taxes and revenue, elect amongst themselves, a common Council of an hundred, and over them, eight officers of especial power, to order and direct the rest, and to dispose of the Intrado: Universam verò administrationem titulo S. Georgij insigniuere, which corporation so established, they entituled

"entitled Saint Georges Banke. It happened afterwards, "that the Republike wanting more monies, was glad to "have recourse unto Saint George, who now grown weal"thy by the iust and orderly administration of his stocke,
 "was best able to relieve them: and as before they released
 "their taxes, so now [ditionem suam oppignorare cepit] they "morgaged their domaine. So that at last, Saint George "continually growing richer, and the State poorer, this "Corporation became possessed of almost all the Townes
 "and Territories belonging to that Signeurie, all which "they governe by their owne Magistrates, chosen by com"mon suffrage from among themselves. It followed here-
 "upon that the common people respected lesse the pub-
 "like, and chiefly bent their favours to the Corporation of "Saint George: this being alwaies prudently and moderate"ly governed, that many times inclining unto tyranny,
 "this never changing either their officers, or forme of go"vernment, that subject to the ambitious lusts of every "proud Usurper, both Forraigner and Citizen. Insomuch, "that when the potent families of the Fregosi, and the A-
 "dorni, contended for the principalltie of that State, most "of the people stood idle, looking upon them, as specta"tors of a quarrell, which did not any way concerne them:
 "Saint George not meddling more in it, than to take oath
 "of the prevailing faction to preserve his liberties. Rarissi-
 "mo sanè exemplo, neque à tot Philosophis, imaginarijs istis in re-
 "bus pub. suis. unquam reperto, &c. A most excellent and rare thing (saith hee) never found out by any of the Philosophers in their imaginarie Common-wealths; that in the same State, and the same people, we may see at once tyran-ny and liberty, justice and wrong dealing, civillie and rudenesse: this onely Corporation preserving in the State, the ancient beautie and orders of it. Nay hee perswades himselfe, that if Saint George should in the end become possessed of the remainders of the publike demeanes, quod om-
 "nino eventurum mihi persuasissimum est, of which hee makes not any question: that certainly that State might not bee onely equall'd with the State of Venice, but preferred before it.

(10) From

(10) From Saint Georges Banke or Treasure, let us proceed unto Saint Georges Band or Regiment; both instituted neere about the same time, and much unto the same purpose: Saint Georges Banke preserving the ancient dignity of that City; his Regiment or Band reviving the decayed repute and credit of the Italian Souldierie. The Author of it, one Ludovicus Conius; the occasion this. After the Norman and Dutchlines were expired in the Realme of Naples, the French and Arragonians became competitours for that Kingdome: the Popes of Rome having at that time, sundry quarrels with the Emperours, and many of the Townes of Italie taking thereby occasion to recover liberty. By meanes of which, the whole country was in a manner over-runne with forraigne souldiers: the States thereof all icalous of each other, and so not willing to employ their owne people. So that all Italie did swarme with French, and Dutch, and Spanish Souldiers: the English also flocking thither, under the conduct of Sir Iohn Hawkwood, after the Peace made betweene our Edward the third, and the French King. At last, this Lodovicus Conius rightly considering how ignominious and dishonourable a thing it was, that Italie should not bee able with her owne hands, to maintaine her owne quarrels; collected a choyce band of Italian souldiers, which he called Saint Georges Regiment: which shortly grew to such esteeme, that they eclipsed the glory of the forraigne companies, and restored the ancient lustre, to their native forces. Is enim postea (saith the same Machiavell) ex Italo milite exercitum conscripsit, sub titulo S. Georgij: cuius tanta fuit virtus & disciplina militaris, ut exiguo temporis intervallo, omnem gloriam militibus externis adimeret, suam Italie restitueret, eoque solo nisi sunt deinceps Italia Principes, si quod inter eos bellum gerebatur. So he; and wee will onely addethus much, that out of this so famous Seminarie of Saint Georges Regiment, came afterwards that Braccio, and Picemini, which had so much to doe in the affaires of Italie: as also that Francisco Sferza, which made himselfe Duke of Millaine, and left it to his children.

(11) Our

Hist. Florent.
lib. 1.

(11) Our next journey must be for Asia, where in the midland of it, we finde a Country betweene Colchis and Albania, called anciently, Iberia, but now Georgia: the reason of which new name is reported diversly. Michael ab Isselt is confident that they tooke their appellation from Saint George, Georgiani verò vocantur à D. Georgio, &c. Others, with better reason, at the least in mine opinion, that they are called so from the Georgi, the ancient inhabitants of these tracts: which ancient Georgians, Sir Walter Raleigh makes to bee denominated, quasi Gordians, from the Gordies, a Mountaine people of the Hill-Countries, and Stephanus in his The-saurus, quasi Georgici, Husbandmen. Georgij Asia populi ab agricultura nomen sortiti, as hee there hath it. Betweene these two, we have one indifferent, Master Sa-Pilgrimage, monell Purchas, who saith that it is called Georgia, ci-l 4. o. 1. sect. 2. "ther from the honour of their Patron Saint George, "or haply because they descended of those Georgi, "which Plinie nameth among the Caspian Inhabitants. Let it suffice, that though they take not their denomination from Saint George, yet they afford him more honour, than any other of the Saints: the same Author telling us, that when they goe into a Church, they ib. sect. 5. give maane respect to other Images; but that Saint George is so worshipped, (wee will permit him to make merry with himselfe) that his Horses hooves are kissed of them. Michael ab Isselt more seriously, though hee Hist. sui temp. erre somewhat in the derivation. Georgiani verò vo- ad Ann. 1577. cantur à D. Georgio, quem velat patrum precipuum, & in suis contra Paganos prelys velat signiferum & propugnatorum ingenti honore venerantur. Quocunque enim tendunt, turmatim incidunt, vexillum D. Georgij insignium circumferentes, animo ope & auxilio, in bello maxime se invari credunt. The Georgians (saith hee) are so denominated from Saint George; whom as their principall Patron, and their Champion in their warres against the Pagans, they worship with especiall honour. For which which way soever they employ their forces, they carry with them a faire Banner, with the picture of Saint George upon it, beleeving that by his assistance, they are much comforted and ayded in their warres. So the Historian. The same affirmed by Pantaleon, in his Historia Iohannitarum, or Historie of the Knights of Malta. A. S. Georgio (saith hee) vocantur Georgiani, quoniam in praelijs suis contra Paganos precipuum patronum, tanquam signiferum omnium honore venerantur & colunt.

(12) But howsoever wee dare not say with him, that this Asian people had their appellation from Saint George their Patron: yet wee are confident of this, that many places both of Asia and Europe, have received denomination from him. For here in Asia, wee finde a large and spacious Valley, not farre from Libanus, which is called Saint Georges Valley: and wee have also noted, that the Towne of Lydda or Diopolis, was by the Christians called Saint Georges; and that there is in Europe, a Saint Georges Valley also, in the midst of Germany: Adde hereunto, that the Thracian Chersonesse is now called commonly Saint Georges Arme: which is remembered by Maginus in his Geographie; and hath beene since observed by George Sandys. And not now onely, but in times before us, hath it had denomination from Saint George: the Sultan in Constantinople, calling the people of this Chersonesse, Romani S. Georgij. Posthac petrus Legatus vester (saith the Sultan in his Letter to the Emperour) ut quoddam veteris templi ruinofum edificium, vicinum Romanis S. Georgij, renovaretur: id etiam fecimus. The learned Mausser doth transerre this appellation, and not without good reason, unto the Sea; from the Thracian Chersonesse, unto the narrow streight or Arme neere to it, which they call Bosphorus: Porro Bosphorus appellatur brachium S. Georgij, saith hee; and like enough the name is fitted unto both. For by the name of Brachium, S. Georgij, I finde it called in a namelesse Writer, who lived about the yeere 1106. and wrote a storie

Cosmograph.
lib. 4.

storie of the expedition of the Westernne Christians to Hierusalem, as also in a Treatise of the same argument, written about the same time, by Baldrick, then Archbishop of Bourdeaux. But why this Chersonesse was called Saint Georges Arms, I cannot say: unlesse perhaps that Relique of Saint George was there in former times laid up; which after by Iussiman the Emperour, was bestowed upon Saint German, as before I noted. Paulus Diaconus makes mention of Saint Georges River, neere the Country of the Bulgorians: Caterum Aprilis mense (saith hee of Constantine the sonne of Eirene) cum castra moveret contra Bulgares, venit ad castellum quod dicitur Probatu, ad rivum D. Georgij. Wee reade in our industrious Camden also, that the Irish Ocean which runneth betweene Britaine and Ireland, is called by Sea-men at this day, Saint Georges Channell. And lest that any part of the old World, should not have some place in it of this name, Patritius Lib 7. cap. ult. tells us in the booke of his owne Navigations, that one of the Azores is called Saint Georges. Est & D. Georgij insula, &c.

(13) To draw up that together which hath beene formerly alledged in Saint Georges cause, I hope it will appeare that there is no occasion, why hee should either be reputed as an Arian, or a Counterfeit, a Larva: nay, why hee should not bee accounted, to haue as high a place in immortality, as any of the other, those blessed Spirits the Apostles, excepted onely. For if antiquity may be thought worthy of any credit, wee have antiquity to friend: or if the common suffrages of so many famous and renowned Writers, successively in every age, may bee of any reckoning with us; Saint George may challenge as much interest in them, as any in the Calendar.

• However, put case that they have erred in their relations of Saint George; and that they tooke that evidence, which out of them wee borrowed, on trust from one another: yet what shall we reply to this, that in the Church of God, hee hath beene hitherto reputed, as an holy holy Martyr. Shall wee conceive the Church of God, would bee so carefull to preserve his memory, in the publike Martyrologies; or give him place in their publike Liturgies, or take such heed unto his Reliques, or honour him with Temples: had hee beene such a damnable and bloody Hereticke; or (which, they say, is better) if hee had never beene at all. Or if hee had beene such, may it bee thought, that both the Church, and all the learned members of it, for 1300. yeeres almost, should bee deluded; no man in all that time, able to see into the fraud: or that the Spirit of God, should quite abandon all the rest, and settle onely on some two or three of later times; who though they kept amongst themselves the Band of Peace, had not, as it appears, the Spirit of Unity? Or, last of all, suppose the Monks and Fryers should joine together, to put a trick upon the world; and that they had prevailed upon the Church, to give countenance unto it: shall wee conceive so poorly of the greatest Kings and Princes in the Christian world, that they were all of them abused, and drawne to doe such honours, to one which eyther never was a man, or was now a Divell? All this is hard to bee digested. And wee may well bee counted easie of beleefe, if onely on the ipse dixit of one man, and the conjectures of another, were they of greater reputation than they are; wee should give faith unto their sayings: (to one of them I meane, for both are not to be beleevd together:) when such a cloud of Witnesses affirme the contrary; Catalogus testium veritatis, a Catalogue of Witnesses in all times and ages. To close up this; if any men may be beleevd upon their bare assertion, why may not they be credited, which say Saint George was once a Martyr, and is now a Saint; as well as they which say he was not? Or if we will not take up any thing on trust, without some reason for it: why rather should not they be worthy of beleefe, which have good prooffe for what they say; than those that build upon conjectures, ill grounded, and worse raised? Lastly, if that may bee beleevd most lately, safely, ὅτι οἱ πολλοὶ καὶ οἱ χαίροντες λέγουσι, in the words of Aristotle, which both the vulgar wits, and more excellent spirits, have agreed on joyntly: still we are where we were, and still Saint George must be a Martyr. But I am now for England, where I am sure to finde as ample testimonies for Saint George, as any other part of the world what ever: concluding here the second part of this discourse, that which concerns the generall iustification of Saint Georges storie.

The end of the second Part.

THE

THE HISTORY OF St. GEORGE, asserted, &c.

The third part.

CHAP. I.

(1) Saint George not antiently esteemed the Patron of the English. (2) S. George of what esteem with the antient Saxons. (3) Churches erected to him by the Normans, here in England. (4) S. Georges Chappell in Kelmscot, Com. Oxon. & the indulgence granted to it. (5) His apparition to K. Richard in the Holy Land. (6) What may be said in generall, touching the apparition of the Saints. (7) And what in this particular. (8) S. George, when first entituled, peculiarly to the English. (9) The honours done him here, and amongst the Irish. (10) S. Georges day, when made a solemne festival with us, in England: and by whom abrogated. (11) Some stumbling in K. Edwards raigne, at S. Georges History.

(1)

Our course is now for England, divisor orbe Britannos, as the Poet hath it; divided from the other parts of the World, as in her situation, so in her felicities. Of which, and of the testimonies which she is able to afford unto Saint George, we shall speake in severall, it being as the Panegy-

V

rick

rick and Solinus call it, Another world: the rather, because in the latter dayes, hee hath beene reckoned as the especiall Patron of this Nation (and so particular to us, as is Saint Antony to Italy, Saint Denis unto France, or any of the other to their proper places. I say, in the latter dayes onely, for antiently we were not thought to have more right to him, than any other of our neighbours: however it bee said by

D. Reynolds, I do. some, that hee hath alwayes beene the Tutelaris S. I. I. C. 5, Sect. 22. and Guardian of our Nation. For if we will beleve our English Fugitives, we may behold the picture of Saint George in their Church at Rome, with this inscription: Georgium Cappadocem Anglia sibi Protectorem elegit, & maximis beneficiis tum Pace, tum Bello receptis, semper religiosissime coluit.

„ Idest. This George of Cappadocia, the English chose to be „ their Patron, and for the many benefits received from „ him both in Peace and Warre, have alwaies very reli„ giously worshipped him. By which, their Semper, if so our Fugitives understand, that ever since the English were first a Nation, & became possessed of these Countreies: Saint George hath beene esteemed as worshipped by them as their patron: we must needs tell them, that howsoever this may be beleved at Rome, it is not likely to bee entertained with us in England. If by their Semper, they meane onely that alwaies since the English chose him for their Tutelary Saint and Patron, he hath beene especially esteemed and worshipped by them: we grant indeed, that since that time, and long before it, Saint George hath beene especially esteemed amongst us, though not religiously worshipped. Lesse reason is there, that wee should beleve that any such opinion, I meane of speciall patronage, should bee fastened on him by the Britons: though Harding an old English Writer, (as Master Selden cites him in his notes on the Poly-Olbion) affirms that that the victorious Prince King Arthur, bare him in one of his Royall Banners; which was a signe of more then ordinary dependance on him, and relation to him. By what authority Harding hath so reported it, I cannot tell. We reade indeed in Malmesbury that at the siege of Bathne (downe [mons Badonicum] not farre from (ant. 4. p. 68

Hist. de gest. An.
 6. 1.

from Bathe, to which the Saxons had retired, and thereon so fortified: that in his Royall Armes he bare the protraiture of the blessed Virgin. Postremo in obsidione Badonici montis, fretus Imagine dominice matris, quam armis suis insuerat, &c. as he there hath it. Huntingdon also saith the like, that in his eighth battaile against the Saxons, Imaginem Sanctæ Mariæ Dei genetricis semperque Virginis super humeros suos portavit; He bare the Image of the blessed Virgin Mary, in his Standard Royall, for so I take it is his meaning; and got that day a notable and signall victory by the assistance of our Saviour and his holy mother. The same say other of our writers. But of Saint Georges Image, no gry quidem, not a word in any of them. Nor is it likely that in those early dayes, S. George was growne so eminent amongst the Britains, as to bee deemed the fittest Saint, to beautifie their banners, and as it were, to be the object of any part of their devotions.

(2) But in the Saxon times, however wee deny that antiently he was esteemed the Patron of the English Nation, yet have we good assurance that hee was held by them in especiall honour. The first that gave the English notice of him, as I take it, was one Arculfus a French Bishop, who having spent much time in the Holy Land, and other Countreies of the East, in his returne for France, was cast upon the West of Scotland, and there kindly entertained by Adamannus, then Abbot of the Monastery of Kilmakell or S. Columba, in the Isle Iona, one of the Hebrides. This Ada. Hist. Ec. l. 5. c. 8 lived about the yere 690 Vir bonus & sapiens & scientia Scripturarum nobilissime instructus, a good and prudent man, saith Bede, and plentifull furnished with the know'edge of the Scriptures, and by continuall converse with this Arculfus, learned of him the most notable things which he had met with in his travels, which he compiled into a booke, and afterwards presented it unto Africus King of Northumberland. This booke of his intituled, De situ terræ sanctæ, thus Lib. 3. c. 4 tels us of Saint Geogre the Martyr, viz. Arculfus homo sanctus, qui nobis hæc omnia de cruce dominica narravit, quam ipse proprie conspexit oculis & osculatus est; etiam nobis de quodam Martyre, Georgio nomine, narrationem contulit, &c. Where note, that Adamannus speaks of quodam Martyre, as of a Martyr, not knowne till then amongst the English. And for the story, it informes us, that in Diospolis, (there where Saint George was buried, as before is said) there was a Marble statua of the Martyr, erected in that very pillar, as it was beleeved, contra quam alligatus, persecutionis tempore flagellatus est, to which they bound him when hee was tormented by the Tyrants. Which Statua of the Saint, cum quidam duricors, & incredulus homuncio, when once a stubborne and incredulous person, assauked foolishly though fiercely with his speare: there followed such exemplary punishment upon him, and so miraculous it seemed both to himselve and the spectators, Ut nomen Dei aeterni ejusdem Martyris agens penitentiam invocaret, &c. that instantly hee addrested himselve to God, and called upon him to be pardoned his presumptuous folly. See the particulars hereof in the booke at large. This notice of the Saint, being thus given unto the English, it was not long before his name became commemorated in their publick monuments and records. Beda who lived about the times of this Adamannus, and somewhat after him, most probably received from him the acts and storie of our Martyr: though perhaps mingled with such uncertaine, if not fabulous narrations, wherewith by that time, most of the histories of the Saints, were shrewdly tainted. Whose testimony what it is, and where expressed, we have shewne already. Suffice it, that the Martyr, being thus verified by Beda, and by him placed in his Martyrology, and Ephemerides: he was admitted also into such Martyrologies, as were peculiar to the Saxons, and to them only. Witnesse a manu-script Martyrologe produced by Master Selden, in the Saxon language: wherein this Martyr is the onely Saint remembred on the 23. of April; though there be many others mentioned on that day, in the Greeke and Latine. The hand and language of it, as hee conjectures, is about the time of Dunstan (who was made Archbishop of Canterbury Anno 971) the evidence which

V. part. 2. c. 3.

Titles of honour.
p. 312.

it

„ it gives us, is in the moderne English, this. Vpon the „ 23. of Aprill (or Easter-month, as it is there called) is „ Saint Georges Feast that noble Martyr, whom Dacianus
 „ the Emperour seven yeeres together (you easily may „ pardon the mistake of time) urged with unspeakable tor„ tures to renounce Christ, which when hee could not „ bring to passe he cut off his head. And in the clo^e ether-
 „ of, Arculfus before mentioned is remembred, as a testimo„ ny of the miracles which the Martyr wrought. So also, in „ the Saxon Homilies of Alfricus, (who next but two succee„ ded Dunstan in the See of Canterbury) appointed for the „ dayes of some peculiar Saints; our Martyr and his suffer„ ings have a speciall place: and therein, this to be observed „ especia^lly, that in his speech to Dacianus, he calls himselfe an „ Ealderman, (or Count) of Cappadocia. For thus, saith hee, „ (I use againe the moderne English) I am called Georgius, and Jd. p. 313.
have an Earldome in mine owne Country of Cappadocia. Of „ Churches conecrated to him in the Saxon-times, I finde „ not any thing: unlesse perhaps Saint Georges Church in „ Southwarke, may be reputed as a monument of their devo„ tion. And this may be beleevd the rather, because I find „ it on record, that in the yeere 1122. (which was some 56.
 „ yeeres no more, after the entrance of the Normans) the Pa„ tronage thereof was given unto the Priory of Bermondsey, „ by one Thomas Arden and his sonne, the then Patrons of „ it. slow. 459.

(3) Proceed we next unto the Normans, or the later English, amongst the writers of which times, we finde not much historically delivered of our Martyr. Malmesbury onely on the by, and as it were in transitu, tels us, that Ra- ma or Ramula, was reported to bee the Scene on which the Tragedy of this Saint was acted, of which before. And in another place, he relates the story of those succours brought by Saint George unto the Christians, as is said already.
 Wherein Archdeacon Huntingdon agrees also with him, affirming, that at the famous battaile of Antiochia, viderunt ipsi exercitum Cælestem equis albis, & phabeis armis, quorum Hist. l. 7 ducto-duflores erant Georgius, Mercurius, (mistaken for Maurinus) & Demetrius. Nor is there more in him, save that he calls the HelleSpont brachium S. Georgij, Saint Georges arme; and in another place, he speaks of Vicus S. Georgij, Saint Georges Towne; by which no question but he meanes Diospolis, as doth also Hoveden. Onely the Monke of Chaster, (he lived about the yeere 1350.) in his Poly-Chronicon, tells us, like an Historian, that in the yeere wherein Galerius was made Emperour, Saint George of Cappadocia, that was Tribunus, in Perse at a City that heth Diospolis that is besides Ioppen, was Martyred under Dacianns the Iuge. So he, or rather his

Camden in Do-
bunio.

, translatour, for I have not the originall. But as for , Temples, erected to him in those times, wee have store
 , enough. For in the yeere 1074 (which was some 8. yeeres
 , after the death of Harald) Robert d'Oyley a noble man of , Normandy, when he had received at the hands of William
 , the Conquerour in reward of his service in the warres, large
 , possessions in the County of Oxon, built a spacious castle
 , on the West side of the City of Oxford, with deepe dit-
 , ches, ramparts, an high-raised mount, and therein a Parish , Church unto Saint George, unto which when the Parish-
 , oners could not have access, by reason that King Stephen
 , did most streightly besiege Maud the Emperesse within , this Castle, Saint Thomas Chapell in the street hardby, was built. About that time also was built S. Georges Church in South werke, unlesse it may be thought rather, as before I said, to be some monument of the Saxons. After King Edward the third. beautified Windsore, with a most faire and stately Church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary and Saint George of Cappadocia: of which more hereafter. And in the reigne of his successour, Simon de Sudbury, then of London, and of Canterbury afterward; repaired, or rather new-built [de novo construxit] Saint Georges Church in Sudbury, whereot he was a native, and from thence denominat: as also a Monastery or College there, pro secularibus Sacerdotibus, valued at the suppression, at 122.l. 18. s. entituled by Saint Georges name. Thus had we also a small Monastery, dedicated to him, in the County of Darby, built by the Greisleys, Gent.

Gedwin de prasul.

Gentlemen of good antientry in the Country, valued at the suppression, at 39. l. 13. s. 8. d. and one at Warwick, a Friary or Fraternity of Saint Georges Clerke, founded by one Robert de Deneby and others, about the time of King Richard the second. So also, in London a Saint Georges Church; a Chappell of Saint George in the Cathedrall of S. Paul, and in that of Lincolne; another in the Parish Church of S. Mary Wolnoth: and a Saint Georges Altar (as I am given to understand) in the Cathedrall Church of Normich. Not to say any thing of Saint Georges Churches in Ipswich, Stamford, Dun-caster, and Burford, where it pleased God to give me both my birth and education; and many other places, in which we will not now inquire. These are Sensibile super sensum, matters so obvious to the sense, and of common being; that wee may heere see downe without further searche.

(4) Yet there is one particuler more, a Chappell dedicated to Saint George, in a small Village of my Country of Oxford shire: which here I mention for a speciall rarity that concernes it. For when the Church-yard there was to be consecrated, the people thereabouts were invited to that ceremony, by a publick instrument, under the hands and seals of all the Bishops then in England: and forty dayes indulgences promised unto them, that either then repaired thither, or should in after times observe the Festivall of S. George, in the foresaid Chappell. The tenour is, as followeth. Universis Sancte Matris Ecclesie filiis presentes litteras inspecturis, Henricus permissioe divina Cant. Arch-episcopus, totius Anglia Primas, & Apostolicae Sedis Legatus, &c. Iohannes eadem permissioe divina Archiep. Eborum, Anglia Primas & dictae Sedis Legatus, Will. London, T. Dunelm. Benedict. Monacensis. Edm. Exon. Phil. Eborac. Wil. Lincoln, Tho. Wiger. Tho. Herefordens. Wil. Cant. & Lichfeldens. Iohannes Rossens. Iohannes Bauger. Iohannes Landavens. Iohannes Bathon. & Wellens. Will. Norwicens. & Robert Sarum, Episcopi, Salutem in aeterna salutis. Gratium obsequium & deo placabile sociens proedum exercera, quatenus fidalium mentes ad

to Junr
- Wilson.
Carlton
Chichester
Hopton

„ charitatis & contemplationis opera, affectivis indulgentiarum „ muneribus excitamus. Cupientes igitur fidelium mentes ad hu„ jusmodi opera propensius excitare, de Dei Omnipotentis im„ mensa misericordia, & beatissima Virginis Maria matris „ sue, ac beatorum Petri & Pauli Apostolorum ejus, nec non „ Sanctorum Alphagi & Thomæ Martyrum, omnium Sancto-„ rum meritis & precibus confidentes: cunctis Christi fidelibus, „ de peccatis suis vere confitentibus, confessis & contritis, qui ad „ Capellam de Kelmescot Licoln. Diocesim (for Oxon was not „ then a Diocese of it selfe, as now it is) in honore Sancti „ Georgij dedicatum, in Festo S. Georgij proximo post datam „ harum literarum nostrarum accesserint, & ibidem dedicatio-„ nis Camiterij ejusdem Capella interfuerint, siue in futurum „ successivis futuris temporibus quotiens idem festum aderit, „ presentes erunt, Orationem Dominicam cum Salutatione An„ gelica devote dicendo, aliave pietatis opera ibidem exercendo, „ toties quoties quadraginta dies Indulgentiarum gratiose conce„ dimus, & quilibet nostrum totidem concedit per presentes, fu-„ turis temporibus duraturas. In cujus rei testimonium sigilla „ nostra fecimus his opponi. Das. 20. Febr. Anno Domi. 1429.
 „ Et translationis nostri Henrici Cant. predicti, Anno 16. A „ pregnant testimony of that faire esteeme, which our Church
 „ generally, and all the Prelats of it, men of great eminency
 „ in their times, did beare unto the memory of our blessed „ Martyr.

in luna.

(5) Saint George thus generally honoured by the En„ glish as a Saint, it was not long, before they fastned a more „ particular respect upon him: the first beginnings of the „ which wee must referre to King Richard & the name the „ first, as it is thus related in the old Register, or black book of „ „ Windsore. Richardo cum contra Turcas & Agarenos, &c.
 „ „ When as King Richard warred upon the Turks and Sa„ „ racens, Cyprus and Acon, and was wearie of so long de„ „ laies: the siege continuing and he full of trouble and an-„ „ xietie, at length, illabente per D. Georgij, ut opinatum est, in- „ „ terventum Spiritu, &c. On a divine inspiration, by the „ „ coming in apparition of Saint George, as he imagined,

„ it.

“ it came into his minde, to draw upon the legges of cert-“ taine choyce Knights of his, a certaine Garter or tacker
 “ of Leather, such onely as hee had then ready at hand.
 “ Whereby they being distinguished, and put in minde of “ future glory promised unto them, in case they wonne the “ victory; they might be stirred up and provoked to per-“ forme their service bravely, and fight more valiantly. In “ imitation of the Romans, who had such variety of Coro“ nets, wherewith militarie men for sundry causes were ac“ cordingly rewarded: to the end, that by these instigati-“ ons (as it were) cowardize being shaken off, the valour
 “ of the minde, and courage of the heart, might shew it selfe “ more resolute. This passage I haue therefore recited at the full length, because that some there be, which have referred the institution of the most noble Order of the Garter, unto this King, and to this occasion: and are perswaded verily, that Edward the third did onely bring it againe in use, being a while forgotten or neglected. But herein, as the learned Camden, who saw as farre into antiquity, as any man either before his birth, or since his death; gives but a cold assent, or rather no assent at all: so neither have I met with any of the more judicious sort, which doe affirme it, though the opinion be related in many of them. But of this matter, more in the next Chapter.

(6) However, though we referre not unto this occasion, and those times, the Institution of the Garter: yet we may warrantably be perswaded, that this occasion did much promote the reputation of that Saint among the English:
 whereby, in tract of time, that most heroicke Order was dedicated to him. As for the thing it selfe, because that all the apparitions of the Saints in these late dayes, are commonly suspected: wee will digresse a little, to shew what may be said in the generall defence of the thing questioned; that so we may the better see, how much wee may beleeve in this particular of King Richard and Saint George. And first if we consult the Scriptures, we finde that at the Resur- rection of our Saviour, the graves were opened, and many bodies of ^{Mat 27. v. 52.} ^{of 53.}

of the Saints which slept, arose, and came out of the graves, and went into the holy Citie, ὡς ἐν ἐκείνῳ πολλοῖς, and appeared unto many. This as it was an extraordinary dispensation, & farre above the common Law and course of Nature; so was it for a specull end: to verifie the resurrection of our Saviour, on whom they did attend, and to assure the faithfull of the certainty of their future Resurrection also. A signe it was, saith Reverend Theophylact, ἀνίσταται ὁ Χριστός ἐκ νεκρῶν: Chrysostome more particularly, σημεῖον τῆς ἐσομένης ἀναστάσεως, a token of the Resurrection; and for the close of all, Saint Hierome, Vi dominum ostenderent resurgentem. So then, although in ordinary course, the Saints are in the Heaven of glories, and that their bodies be corrupted in the earth: yet upon speciall caule, and at the pleasure of their God, they may assume an humane shape; and in that shape appeare unto their brethren, according to the will of him that sends them. For if the Angels, to whom no bodies doe belong, have appeared visible to many of Gods people, in execution of the charge committed to them: how much more easily may we beleieve the same, of the Saints departed; that even they also, at some times, and on some great occasions, have beene employed by God in their owne ordinary forme and shape? Potamiana a Virgin Martyr, is reported by Eusebius, that she appeared unto Basilides her Executioner, the third night after her decease, σέβανον αὐτῇ τῇ καραλῇ βελιδίου, putting a Crowne upon his head, foretelling so, that not long after he should receive the Crowne of Martyrdom, which did accordingly fall out. Καὶ ἄλλαι πολλαὶ κατ' Ἀλεξάνδρειαν, &c. Nay, the same Author tels us, that many of the people of Alexandria (where she suffered) were converted to the Faith, by the frèquent apparitions of that Virgin. Other examples there are many, and of Angels some. Of the Archangell Michael, there are reports of severall apparitions, upon Mount Garganus in Naples, upon Saint Michael's Mount, in Normandie, and Cornwall: and one unto King Charles the 7. on the bridge of Orleans, in his warren against the English, (illustri seu miraculo seu viso D. Michaelis, in prætia ad pontem Anxeliens. civitatis, &c) which

*Ecd Hist l. 6.
cap. 4.*

Camden in Daumenijs.

Hospinian. & ali.

which was a chiefe occasion of the French Order of Saint Michael. I know indeed, that in times of late, the Priests have dealt exceeding faithlesly, both with Church and people in this kinde: their doctrine, in the point of Purgatory, being such, as could not well subsist without many soule Impostures, and counterfeit apparitions of the dead. Inso-much that as once Lyra said, In Ecclesia Dei, populus saepe in 14. c. Dam- decipitur à Sacerdotibus, fideis miraculis, lucri causa; Gods people many times is couzened by the Priests with fained miracles: so we may say also, that for the sake of filthy lucre, they have as often beene abused with forged apparitions.

7 (P) But this of all things else, cannot bee objected against this apparition of Saint George. King Richard was a Prince of too brave a spirit to be so suspected. And for the thing it selfe, as I beleeve, the Register hath not abused the King, in the deliverie of the storie: so neither that the King should devise the passage, to abuse posterity. Taking this therefore as for granted, that that which is delivered to us in the Register, was so reported by the King: we doubt not but the probability and truth thereof, may very easily bee defended. For our dispatch wherein, we will make bold to use such resolutions, which by Saint Austin have beene made in a bulinesse not much different. And first it might be verified that the apparition was true and reall, in reference to him who saw it: although perhaps not in the person of the Saint, but of some Angels rather, who assumed his shape. Which visitations of the Angell, are by God commanded on some speciall occasions, either to terrifie the wicked, or comfort and confirme the godly. Cur ergo non credimus operationes istas angelicas, per dispensationem providentiz dei, &c. sive instruantur hoc mentes mortalium, sive sal- tantur, sive consolentur sive terreantur, as the Father. This might I say bee verified in this particular, had the King beene positive, and not affirmed it onely upon fancie and imagination. For being at that time afflicted and perplext in minde, (why might not God by such an extraordinary meanes, means, vouchsafe to comfort and advise him; who for no other reason, but the advancement of Gods honor, had took upon him such an extraordinary journey. Which may be also said in iustification of that storie, before related by Rapertus. But since this apparition, seems founded rather in the Kings imagination, then the realitie of the thing: we will take counsell further with the same Saint Austin, to see by him, how to resolve it. And first we must take notice, that the apparitions of this Saint (as it was generally beleaved) to the Christian Armies; had very much advanced the reputation, both of the Saint, and of the service: so much that his assistance was implored most principally, whether it were to aide them in their battels, or to assist them in their counsels. Which being so, and the King lingering at the siege of Ptolemaie, wearied with long delaies, (as the storie tels us) his thoughts distempered with anxietie, and his minde bent upon those succours which by Saint George had beene brought formerly to the Christian Forces: he might as in a dreame whiles he was asleepe, or in a vision waking, conceive Saint George indeed to appeare unto him, and counsell him to that device which he after followed. Saint Austin gives two severall, both rules and instances to this purpose And first (saith he) one man doth often see another in his dreames, either consulting with him about things present, or telling him of things to come: the other partie, being perhaps farre off, at the present time. The instance which he gives, is of one Enlogius, who reading of a piece of Tully, to his schollers, met with a passage in it of no little difficultie. Which when he could not understand, et vix potuit dormire sollicitus, could scarce sleepe for the anxietie of his minde, (which was King Richards case) I (saith Saint Austin) though at that time in Milaine, did in his sleepe expound it to him: immo non ego, sed imago mea, nesciente me; or rather not my selfe, but my shape onely, which did that night appeare unto him. Hereupon he concludes, quia mirum ergo est, &c. What mervaille is it then, if many times the dead themselves not knowing of it, are scene by those which are alive, as in a dreame, and tell them such

Cap. 11.

Cap. 10.

such particulars, which they finde after to be true. Now that which happeneth unto some, when they are asleepe, may sometimes happen unto others when they are awake: whether it be, that for the time they be as in a trance, or that their thoughts are fixed, and their imaginations settled on some object: so fixed and settled, ut alius quam si dormirent corporis sensibus abstrahantur, that they appeare more ravished, and more divided from their senses, then if they were asleepe indeed. For unto them (saith he) apparent imagines vivorum et mortuorum, the shapes or images both of the living and the dead, doe present themselves, and give them notice of some things, which when they come unto themselves, they doe most perfectly remember. An instance of the which, he doth also give us in a man of Tullium, neere Hippe, with whom, he many times had conference about it. Either of these may be Richards case, as before I said; and not improbably one was. Dreames often times follow the cogitations of the minde, as well as the condition or constitution of the body: and well we know, that frequently, imagination worketh no lesse effects, if not more true and reall, then that here recited. Adde hereunto, that he is said in Cotevium, to have re-edified Saint Georges Church in Lydda, as before we shewed: which probably might have relation to some such matter as this now spoke of.

(g.) But to proceede, the same of such his apparition to that King, did, as before I said, exceedingly promote the reputation of that Saint among the English: so farre, that the most excellent Prince K. Edward the third, made choyce of him for his Patron. So Master Camden witnelseth in his “Remaines, that George hath beene a name of speciall re“spect in England, since the victorious King Edward the “third, chose Saint George for his Patron: and the English “in all encouounters and Battailes, have used the name of “Saint George in their cries; as the French did, Montjoy, “Saint Denis. The more immediate occasion was, that this Edward at the battaile of Callice, Anno 1349. being much troubled with griefe and anger, drawing his sword, called.

Tbn. Walsingham
Anno Reg. 23.

called earnestly upon Saint Edward, and Saint George: whereupon many of his Souldiers flocking presently unto him, they fell upon the enemy, and put many of them at that instant to the sword. Rex Edwardus providè frendens more apri, & ab ira & dolore turbatus, evaginato gladio, S. Edwardum & S. Georgium invocavit. dicens, Ha Saint Edward, Ha Saint George, Quibus auditis & visis, milites confestim Anglici confluebant ad Regem suum. Et facto impetu contra hostes, tam animose institerunt, quòd ducenti ex illis ceciderunt interfecti, &c. The next yeere after followed the institution of that noble Order of the Garter, dedicated unto Saint George, wherein he is intituled by the name of Patron of the Realme of England: also by which he came possessed alone, of that speciall patronage, as the more military Saint, which in the former Invocation, might seeme to bee divided, betweene Saint Edward and himselfe. Nor did the King stay here, but hauing chose Saint George to be the tutelarie Saint and Patron of his Soulderie; he caused him to be painted as upon a lusty Courser, holding a white Shield with a red Crosse on it in his hand, and gave unto his souldiers, to every one a white Coat or Cassock, with two red Crosses, on each side of them one; to weare upon their armour. Edwardus item (saith Pol. Virgil.) cum D. Georgium militia presidem optasset, postea ei armato & equo insidentii, dedit scutum album, rubra cruce perinsigne: dedit & militibus suis saga alba, utrimque binis crucibus, item rubris, munita; que illi super armaturam induerent. So that (saith he) it is a seemely and magnificent thing, to see the Armies of the English, to sparkle like the rising Sunne: the Soulderie of other Countreies having no habit, either to distinguish or adorne them. From henceforth therefore we must not looke upon Saint George, as a Saint in generall, but as conceived, to be (such was the superstition of those times) the speciall Patron of the English: for so he is intituled by King Edward the third, in the originall institution of the Garter, where he acquaints us, that he had founded and ordained that noble Order, to the honour of Almighty God, and of the blessed Virgin our Lady Saint Mary, and of the glorious Martyr Saint George, Patron

Hist. Anglic.
l. 19.

ad h.

Patron of the right noble Realme of England. So in a supplication exhibited in the name of all the Clergie, to Archbishop Arundell, Anno. 1. Hen. 4. wherein it was requested that Saint Georges day might be made a maius duplex, (whereof more in the ninth Section) he is called Saint Georgius totius militie Anglicane spiritualis Patronus, &c. And in the preamble to the constitution of Archbishop Chicheley, Vide sect. 5. wherein his festivall was established: he is expressly stiled, Patronus et Protector dicta nationis (of this Kingdome) specialis. Adde hereunto, that in the first of Henry the sixth, the Company of Armorers in London were incorporated by the name of the fraternitie of Saint George: which questionlesse reflected on him, though not as Patron specially of this Realme of England, yet as the tutelarie Saint of militarie men. Else to what purpose should the Armorers, whose trade is onely destinate to the use of Souldiers, be made a Corporation by his name, and under his protection. But to proceede unto the honour given him here of speciall patronage, either in imitation or allusion to the ancients. The Pilgrime in the Poet thus prophecieth unto his Red-crosse Knight, as he there calls him.

Regist. Arundel part 1. p. 53.

Faery Qu. l. 1.
cant. 10. n. 61.

*Then seek this path which I to thee presage,
Which after all, to heaven shall thee send:
Then peaceably thy painefull pilgrimage
To yonder same Hierusalem doe bend;
Where is ordain'd for thee a blessed end.
For thou amongst these Saints, which thou dost see,
Shalt be a Saint, and thine owne Nations friend,
And Patron: thou Saint George shalt called be Saint George of merry England, the signe of victorie.*

And hereunto alludes Mich. Drayton, in his Poly-Olbi- on; in a great controversie, questionlesse, which was then hot, among some Nymphes of his in that Poem.

*And humbly to S. George, their countries Patron pray,
To prosper their designs, now in that mighty day.*

(8) Of

Purchas Pilgrim. l. 3. c. 13.

Camden in Reliq.

In Itenis or Cambr. Sh.

Hals Chron.

Vol. I. p. 142.

(8) Of other honours done by the English to Saint George, more than they called upon him, as their Advocate of victory; it may perhaps seeme little necessary to dilate. But since our Invocation of God and Saint George, is by some men conceived to be rather Turkish, than truly Christian: we will produce such evidence as may be lesse liable unto offence. Of which kinde, I perswade my selfe, was that honour done unto him in a peece of gold, currant in those times in this kingdome, called the George-noble: which on the one side had the picture of Saint George upon it, with this Impresse; Talis dicata signo mens fluctuare nefcit. Nor can it be offence, that many noble Families in this Realme, had the name of Saint George: an ancient family of Saint George, (out of which flourished many Knights, since the time of King Henry the first,) at Hatley, which is of them called Hatley Saint George, as I have found in learned Camden: another of them, as I conceive it, at Hinton, Saint George, in Com. Sommerfet; the Baronie at this present, of the right honourable the Lord Pawlet. But this I leave unto Clarentieux, one of the Kings of Armes; as most interested in it. I will not here observe that Charles of Burgundie, one of the fellowes of the Garter, being in discontent with Edward the fourth for his Peace with France, brake out into this passion; Oh Lord, Oh Saint George, have you done thus indeed, &c. or that the English used his name, as an ordinary oath among them. Par S. George disent les Angloys, vous dites vray, &c. as Froissart notes it. These things, I say, I will not speake of, lest they may give offence to our nicer eares; nor of more honours of this lesser ranke or quality, afforded him in England; and therefore though the Sea be very troublesome and unruly, we will passe over Saint Georges Channell into Ireland. And here I shall observe that onely, which I finde in Master Seldens notes on the Poly-Oibion; as viz. that under Henry 8. it was enacted; that the Irish should leave their Cramaboo, and Butleraboo, words of unlawfull Patronage; and name themselves as under Saint George and the Kings of England. A matterie of no small moment, considering the un-

untractable nature of that people: and how tenaciouslie they adhere to their antient customes,

(p) Nor was the Church of England, lesse zealous in S. Georges honour, then the State. Before we shewed you how the day of his death and Martyrdome, which had beene long celebrated in the Church of God; was first established for a set and solemne Festivall, in a Synod here held, at Oxon. But after, when the Order of the Garter was erected, and intituled to him; his Festivall, which was before of an inferiour Kind, or a minus duplex, as they call it; was made more solemne, and celebrated with more variety of divine service. A matter first attempted in the time of King Henry the 4. In the beginning of whose reigne, a convocation being held under Archbishop Arundell, it was petitioned by the Clergy, but at the instance of the King, that S. Georges daye (being he was the speciall Patron of this nation) Institatur per totam Angliam Festive feriandum, sicut cetera nationes patronorum suorum festa colunt, might heere be celebrated with as much observance, as other people solemnized the festivals of their severall Patrons. Which proposition, what entertainment it then had, I doe not finde. The close conspiracy of the Hollands and their associates to destroy the King, together with the strong rebellion of the Percies, and the stirres in Wales: might like enough divert him, at that time, from dealing further in the cause.

Regist. Arundell.
p. 1. f. 53

(10) But in the first of his successour, the businesse was effected, and Saint Georges day made a festum duplex, or a solemne Festivall. The thing affirmed historically by Thom. Walsingham, in the beginning of that Prince. Et in Hen. 5. tempore (saith he) decretum fuit per Cleri concilium Londoniense celebratum, ad instantiam Regis nunc, ut festivitas S. Georgij Martyris ut duplex festum, (he meanes, as we shall see anon, a majus duplex) de cetero celebratur. More fully are wee certified hereof, out of the Constitution or the Act it selfe, as it is extant on record in Lindwood, lib. 2. cap. de Feriis. Verbo.

Fepi Martyr. p. 310.

In Hen. 5.

bo Ineffabilis, as followeth. Ineffabilis, &c. Nos qui Dei laudem in Sanctis suis in quibus gloriosus existis, in nostra Provincia cupimus ampliari, Regis & regni incolarum ad hoc hortatibus excitati, confratrumq; nostrorum & Cleri Provincia nostra dilecti concilia, quin imo & nostri Provincialis concilij robore ac decreto suffulsi, antiquorum patrum piis erga Sanctos Dei devotionis affectum prosequentes; Festum Beati Georgii Martyris, sub Officio duplici, & ad modum majoris duplicis Festi, tam per clerum quam per populum dicta Provincia, uniuersas Ecclesias eiusdem, per expressum consensum nostrorum fratrum Cleri antedicti, volumus, statuimus, & precipimus annis singulis perpetuis futuris temporibus sollempniter celebrari; & in ipso Festo ab omni seruilis opere, per omnes Civitates & loca ipsius Provincie, Sicut & prout in Festo natalis domini precipimus Feriari, quo magis in ipso Festo plebs fidelis ad Ecclesias conveniant, Deum laudent, ipsius S. & omnium Sanctorum patrocinia deuotius implorent, & pro Rege & regni salute instant frequentius & exorent. So farre the Constitution. In which two things are to be noted. First that the Festival is made a Festum duplex, sub officio duplici ad modum majoris festi duplicis; 1d est, as Durand doth informe us, a solempne festival, whercon the Responds and the Versicles were (for the greater Majesty) sung by two, and every part of the diuine service, begun by two also; and all the Anthems, both for the matins and the even-song doubled: which was the most complete, and solempne service then in use. Next that it was to bee obserued with no lesse expressions of piety and devotion, then the Feast of Christs Nativity: then which, what greater testimony of the affection of those times unto the memory of this Saint, could possible be manifested. Adde hereunto, that Chicheley then Archbishop of Canterbury, when this Act was made, (he was translated thither on the 29. of Iuly, Anno 1414. being the first of this Henries reigne) did by a locall statute, oblige the fellowes of All-soules in Oxon. Which house he founded, to celebrate this day by saying an high Masse, and doing all religious duties in as full a maner as any of the Apostles and Evangelists. In festis infra scriptis, (so goeth the Statute, C. de modo & temporibus deuote discendi Horas Canonicas in Capella) viz.

Rationale diu-norum 1, 7

S. Stephani, Iohannis Apostoli, Innocentium feria 2. 3. 4. hebdomadarum Pasche, & Pentecostes, Inventionis Crucis, Sanctorum Andrea, Thome, Mathe. Philip, & Iacob. ceterorumque Apostolorum & Evangelistarum, Georgij, Hugonis, Davidis, Katharine, & Maria Magdalene, Volumus aliam Missam et ditionum Fectorum Officia, modo debito exequantur. Nay so precise and punctuall were our fore-Fathers, in celebrating of this Feast, that rather then it should be swallowed upon by some greater festivall, it either was anticipated or delaied. Anticipated, if it fell upon East-Eve, as sometimes it may, what time it was appointed to be solemnized the 8. or 9. day preceding; as Master Selden notes it, out of an old Ordinale of the Province of Yorke. Deferred, in case it fell upon the Octaves of Easter, (the Octaves of the greater Feasts were celebrated with no lesse solemnity, then the feasts themselves:) for then it was to bee observed on the morrow after, a solemne mention being made onely of the Saint, at the evening service. So witnesseth a faire and ancient Breviary, which I have in manü-script. Si Festum hoc in Octavis Pascha contigerit, differatur in crastinum, et ad secundas Vesperas de Dominico fiat Sollemnis mentio de festo. Afterwards in the time of King Henry the 8. when as the number of the Holy dayes was to bee abridged, that so there might more scope bee left for the peoples labour: the festivall of Saint George together with some few others, besides those still retained in our publicke Liturgie, were suffered to continue as they were before. And in the English Bibles, commanded by that Prince, Anno 1538. to bee kept publicly in the Churches, there is appointed for this day a particular Gospell and Epistle: this being taken out of the first Chapter of Saint Iames, beginning at the second verse, Count it all joy rather when yee fall into temptation, &c. the other out of the 15. of Saint Iohns Gospell, I am the true Vine, &c. which is the Gospell and Epistle appointed for his day in the old Missall, Señ. Vñm Sarum. Nor was this Festivall thus established, or rather made more solemne, as before I said, abolished presently upon the reformation of Religion in this

Stat. 5. & 6. of
Edw. 6.

Kingdome : but was kept Holy for the greater part of King Edwards reigne. At last, about the fifth and sixth yeeres of the said King Edward, a Catalogue of such Festivalls as were to bee observed for the times to come, was drawne up and ratified by Parliament : in which Saint Georges day, with many others, were omitted. Not that they thought him lesse a Saint, then any of the rest, whose Festivals were then excluded : but that the people might bee eased of many of the Festivalls, which were become a burden to them. Onely it was permitted by the said Statute, unto the Fellowes of the Garter, that they might celebrate Saint Georges day, and solemnize his Feast as before they did : though after by a private Statute made in a Chapter of the Order, the Festivall was translated to another time, as wee shall shew you presently. Yet neither could the one or the other, so totally obliterate the memorie thereof ; but that Saint George doth still retaine his place in our Common Calendars. Not in those onely made for the State of every yeere, where commonly hee shines in Festivall redde letters as doe no other of the Saints, excepting those, whose feasts are by the Church kept Holy : but also in the Calendar prefixed before our Liturgy, where hee is specially honoured with the name of Saint, as is no other, not being neither an Apostle or Evangelist, but Saint Martin onely. Sufficient evidence, that as the State of England, hath formerly beene much devoted to Saint Georges honour : so he doth still preserve his place and reputation, in the opinion of the Church. An argument with mee so powerfull and prevailing, that in respect thereof I value not at all, either the meere word, or bare conjectures of any man, of what especiall name soever, which guided by his private spirit, shall resolve the contrary. For how exceeding faithlesse were our Church in the things of God, should shee continue the remembrance of Saint George in her publicke Calendar, were shee perswaded of him, that hee was so vile an heretick, as some have made him : or suffer him to possesse a place therein;

therein; did she believe he were a counterfeit, a Larva, or a Tragelaphus, as the others tell us.

(12) Thus from the Saxon times, untill the reigne of King Edward the sixth, have wee pursued the history of Saint George in this Church and Nation: and finde not any thing till then, which might detain or hinder us in that pursuite. But then as hath beene shewen, in part, already, and will appeare more fully by the sequel; some few began to juggle with him: and did endeavour, what they could, to robbe him of those honours, which both by Church and State were conferred upon him. Calvin, who then was very great with the Duke of Somerset, had formerly declared himselfe against our Martyr. This was enough to make the Duke, who was then Protector, to thinke but poorly of this Saint, though as it seemes, hee was not well resolved about it. For in his answer to a letter of Steven Gardiners Bishop of Winton, which bare date in May, Anno 1547. he tells us ^{Fox in Ails and Monum.} thus. Some men (saith hee) have thought the Image, of Bellerophon or Perseus, was turned first and appointed to bee Saint George; and that of Poliphemus, Hercules, or some such other Colossus, to bee Saint Christopher: because Authentick Histories have not fully proved their two lives. But these bee indifferent, to bee true, or not true, either invented upon some device, or rising upon a true fact or history; and whether it were so or not, it makes no great matter to the present businesse. (See what that businesse is in the booke at large.) So that wee see the Duke was not well resolved what to determine in the point. Indeed it was a point then but little studied. For when King Edward ^{6th} in the fourth yeere of his reigne, on a Saint Georges day, ^{Ibid.} at Greenwich, demanded of his Lords, the Dukes of Somerset and Northumberland being then in presence; what that Saint George was, whom wee here so greatly honoured: the Treasurer answered in the name of all the rest,

„ (as Master Foxe relates the Storie) that hee had „ never reade of any George, but of him onely, who „ in the Legend is reported manfully to have drawne
 „ his sword, and kill'd the Dragon with his speare.
 „ And when the King being great with laughter, re-„ plyed, I pray you my Lord, what did hee with his „ sword the while; hee answered, that hee could not „ tell. This is conceived by some, to have beene „ spoken by the King in scorne; as if hee did dislike „ those honours, which were heere done unto a Saint,
 „ of whose existencie or being there was not any good „ record. Well, suppose it so, that the King spake in de„ rision; what mervaile is it, or what will they con„ clude from thence. The King was then no more „ then thirteene yecres of age, as the Story tels us; apt
 „ to beleve of Saint George, as the Protestour was plea„ sed to informe him. And so it seemes hee was. For „ afterwards they did not onely exclude Saint Georges „ daie, from amongst the Festivalls: for which they „ might pretend the reason before shewed: but they en„ acted in a Chapter held at Westminster, that the most „ Noble Order of the Garter, should not bee any lon„ ger entituled by Saint Georges name. For thus goeth
 „ the Statute. First of all bee it enacted that this Or„ der shall bee called the Order of the Garter, and „ not of Saint George. Not of Saint George? Why „ so? Left (saith the Statute) the honour which is „ due to God the Creatour of all things, might seeme „ to bee given unto the creature. Bee it as they „ would have it. But then Saint George must bee a crea„ ture; and not a Counterfeit or Larva, as Calvin „ tells us: and as for making him an Arian hereticke, „ it was not thought upon in a long time after. Nor „ was this all, but they enacted in that Chapter, that „ for after-times, the Feast of the said Order should „ bee celebrated upon Whitsun-Eve, Whitsun-Day, „ and Whitsun-Munday and not upon Saint Georges „ day.

„ day , as before it was : which was a full and finall disavowing of all Saint Georges interest , in the said Order. But long Saint George stood not devided of his honours. For where these Acts were made in Marche , Anno one thousand five hundred fifty two, of that King the last ; they were repealed , all of them , in the first of Quene Marie. And not repea„ led onely , but it was then decreed in Chapter , „ that Sir William Peter , being made Chancellour of „ the Order at that very time , Omnia ista novitia Sta-Register win; „ tuta è Statutorum Libro illico eximeret , ac prorsus ex- de- for.
 „ pungeret & deleteret , ne ulla unquam eorum memoria a- „ puà posteros extaret ; should raze and sponge them
 „ all , out of the publicke Registers ; that no me-„ moriall of them might bee transmitted to posteritie.
 This was then done accordingly. Nor was there ever any Prince since then , that ever studied to revive them ; or thought their Order blemished , either by bearing of his Name , or keeping of his Festivall :
 though they have (all of them) beene exceeding tender , both of Gods honour , and the Religion hee established. Which passages of Kings Ed- wards reigne , are not so much to bee imputed , as I take it to any ill affection, which either Prince or Peeres had harboured of our blessed Martyr ; as to the queazinessse of the times rather, in which they lived. But now from this K. Edward, let us proceed unto another : from him that is supposed to thinke the noble Order of the Garter, defiled in being called by S. Georges name ; to him that first erected it, and vowed it in the first erection, to Saint Georges honour.

add. 427

CHAP. II.

(1) Of military Orders. (2) King Arthurs Knights of the round table. (3) Windsore made famous by the institution of the Order, as other places for the holding of it. (4) Mortimers round table at Killing worthe, and King Edward the thirds at Windsore; in imitation of King Arthurs. (5) The institution of the most noble Order of Saint Georges Knights. (6) Why called of the Garter. (7) The fable of the Countesse of Salisbury, and her Garter; examined, and rejected. (8) Of the Castle and College of Windsore. (9) Sir Walt. Raleighs opinion touching the killing of the Dragon. (10) And of them also, who desire to have the George Symbolicall.

(1)

Being to intreate now purposely of Saint Georges Knights, and of the Order of the Garter which was dedicated to him; I shall a little speake of Military Orders; which here have beene as antient, as in any Kingdome whatsoever. For our dispatch wherein we must call to minde (what before we noted) that in the infancy or cradle, as it were, of the Roman Monarchy, it was a custome of the Emperours, to honor such as were of greatest merit for their skilfull in armes, with a degree above the rest: which was performed most commonly by putting on upon them, a military belt or girdle, the honourary marke of their well deserving. These Suidas calls μονόζωνοι, and doth describe them by these tokens: first, that they were οἱ πρῶτοι τῶν στρατηγῶν, the most most honourable of the Souldiery; and secondly, οι μὴ τὸν αὐτὸν τῶς ἄλλοις ζωνήρα φορέοντες, that they did wearea different belt or girdle from other men. Which their advancement was not more honour unto them, then it was safety to the Prince: those which were so advanced, being more strictly tyed both in oath and honour to the Princes service. This was the antient way of creating Knights: in place whereof, that forme of dubbing, by a blow upon the shoulder, hath since succeeded. Which when it grew too common, especially in these latter times, when Knighthood was bestowed according unto the estate and substance of the party; as well as for his valour and courageous achievements: it seemed expedient to the Kings and Princes of the world, to thinke upon some other way to honour vertue; and to nobilitate such men, as were most neere and deere unto them. A thing exceedingly in use, in these parts of Christendome: especially since the institution of the Templars and Hospitalers, and those who tooke their name from our Saviours Sepulcher. Which Orders, though in part Religious and Regular, like those of Friars; gave the first hint to others to devise the like: yet such as might be more at large, for the encouragement of valour, and reward of vertue. To these beginnings we referre those heroick Orders, which since that time have beene invented: as they themselves may seeme to owe their birth and being, to some such like as went before them. Orders of Knights, as well as those of Monkes and Fryers, have one begot and berd another.

Prod

(2) I say as they themselves may seeme to owe their birth, and being to some such like as went before them. For these, although the antientest of all now in use; were yet but puiſnes in comparison of one that went before them: that viz. instituted by King Arthur, so much celebrated, The Order of the Knights of the round Table. Of which however many fabulous vanities are reported; yet doubtlesse there is much in it of reall truth: which wee will sift, and single out, the best we can, because the Order of the

Gara

Garter, doth in some sort depend upon it. Know then that Arthur, being himselfe a valiant Prince; and having manifold occasions in his warres against the Saxons, to make use of military spirits: did in the end by their assistance and his owne conduct, obtaine against his enemies many a signall victory. So that at last, although not long living in perfect peace and quiet; and willing to remunerate that vertue, by the which he was victorious: hee instituted this his Order, indeed the first of all that kind, which hee entituled by the name of the Round Table. Old Bruto whom I have in manu script, placeth the institution of it, betweene the yeeres 522. and 527. when having vanquished all his enemies, hee remained in peace. And then it followeth in the story, that meliores & valentiores milites omnium terrarū (conceive it of those specially whom he had formerly imployed) resorted to him: for whose more plausible entertainment, Rotundam Tabulam fieri fecit, &c. hee caused his Round Table to bee made; that so all of them might both equally bee placed, and served indifferently. Matthew of Westminster, writing of these times, and of the actions of that Prince, takes notice also of that generall course, which was made at King Arthurs Table, for Tilts and Tournaments and such like martiall devices. For in the yeere 523. hee relates it thus. Tunc invitatis quibusque magnificis ex regnis longe positis, tantam in domo sua cepit habere facetiam; ut sine arma induendo sive ferendo, &c. Longe manentes populos ad sui emulationem provocaret. By meanes whereof (saith hee) hee drew all Kings and Princes, which were neere about him, both to admire and emulate his noble vertues. John Avalonius, whom Bale calls Hamvill, and surnames him (but corruptly) Archirenius, who lived about the yeere 1200. doth in briebe remember it: calling King Arthur, the ornament of the Round Table. Arthurus tertius Mensis gemina venustas, &c. as it is cited in Sir John Prices defence of the British history. So hath Dan Lidgate also, the Monke of Bury, where his Muse tels us, that

—by the ordinance
 Of prudent Merlin called his Prophete
 And by his counsaile, he let make a seate Amongst his Brittons famous and notable Throughout all the world called the Round Table.

Lib. 8. c. 25

Most worthy Knights proved of their hand
 Chosen out by Arthur, this Table was begonne,
 Their famous noblesse through every land
 Shone by report as doth the midday sonne
 To fames palais the renome is up ronne.
 Statutes he set by vertuous ordinance
 Under profession of martiall governance, &c.

Neither have foreeiners, and those of good account, beene silent of him and his Table. Hector Boetius reportes of Hist. Scot. l. 9 him, that being much delighted in Tilts and Tournaments, he alwaies had about him a troope of selected Champions:
quos cum epulandum foret, vel de negotio militari consultandum, which at all publicke feattings and military consultations, he ordered in Coronam, as in a Circle, so to avoid that envious chalenge of precedency. Which Sessions house (saith hee) nostrates, & Britanni ceteraque nationes, both Brittons, Scots, and all other nations call commonly the Round Table. Hermannus Schedell in his Chronica Chronicorum, Aetas Sex'a bestows upon King Arthur, the attributes of Cantatissimus, Anno 514.
Fortissimus, Belicossissimus, & Christianissimus Princeps, a most Renowned, Valiant, Victorious, and most Christian Prince, and tels us in particular mensam rotundam instituisse, that hee ordained the Round Table; though for the seate thereof he mistake himselfe, as we shall shew you presently. The same related, or rather out of him repeated, by Bergemensis in his Supplementum. See also what Volaterran hath, both of the victories of this Prince, and the Round Table by him instituted.

stituted for his Knights: ne quid his discrimen ex ambitione foret, to take away all occasion of ambition amongst them. But that of Abraham Ortelius, is, as I take it, of especial note in the present businesse: who tells us out of Spangeberg and Hoppenrodius two German Authors, that Hegar Earle of Mansfield lived in King Arthurs daies, and was a Knight of the round table; proving thereby the antientry of that famous Earldome. Hegerus Comes ejus (id est, of Mansfield) illius celeberrimi Arthuri Britannorum Regis coetaneus fuit; atque una cum ceteris Regis istius heroibus, mensam quam vocant Rotundam instituit. Which testimony coming from a man, not any way affected unto fabulous narrations, is not a little to be prized. The number of the Knights, as it is generally delivered, was 24. their names, and blazon of their armes, you shall finde in Bara: called of the Round Table, from the table about which they sate at their publicke meetings; so framed of purpose to avoid all quarrell of precedencie: ut omnes aequaliter sederent in mensa, & aequaliter servirentur, as my Bruto hath it. A thing used antiently by the Gaules, from whom the Britons are descended; as Athenas hath observed.

(3) The place in which this Order was first instituted, was Windfore-Castle. This the blacke book of Windfore doth affirme expressly. Arthurus arcem illam nobilem [Windfore-Castle] inchoavit & Rotundam ibi quam vocant Mensam instituit: and withall tells us, that the most famous Order of St. Georges Knights, succeeded in the place thereof; as its like it did. Froissard, and out of him Du Chesne, as for the Castle, and the Table, say the same. Lequel (which Castle) Artus le grand Roy des Bretons avoit premierement fonde pour mettre la Table Ronde, autrefois si celebre & renommee par toute la terre. So Du Chesne hath it out of Froisart. With whom agreeth the Author Des grandes Chroniques de Bretagne, who lived about the time of King Henry the 8. saying: Le Roy Artus, fait faire autrefois le Chasteau de Vindfore, & in iceluy tener la noble Table Ronde, &c. Geoffry of Monmouth in his British History, placeth it at Carleon upon Uske, in Monmouth.

mouth-shire, the better to nobilitate his owne Country. Schedel and Bergomenfis, apud Cornubiam Civitatem, mistaken easily for Cornubia Civitatem, some chiefe Towne of Cornwall; King Arthur being borne in that Province. But howsoever, this Carleon, as also Camelot, and Winchester, are famous by it: not in K. Arthurs booke onely, but in verie good and approved Authors. Giraldus makes Carleon to be Arthurs Court, Legati ubi Romani adiere, at such time as the Roman Ambassadors desired him: which, as K. Arthurs story tells us, was at the feast of Pentecost, when all his Knights were then about him. Camelot now in Somerlet, but antiently esteemed as almost all the West Country was, a part of Cornwall (remember what was said before by Schedel and Bergomenfis de Cornubia Civitate) is still commemorated by the people of that County, as King Arthurs Pallace. And in the Castle-hall at Winchester, there hangs a round table, which they say was that of Arthur. Its true, that Camden thinks it not bee so antient, and I thinke so too; but I beleve withal that it is there preserved in memory of K. Arthurs table, which many times was held in that antient City; this table having also in it about 24. sieges, which is supposed to be the number of K. Arthurs Knights. Besides these places, wherein that Prince did much reside, there are some others, famous for King Arthurs table; the Court removing with the Prince. Iohn Stowe informes us, that in the Parish of Laufannan, Com. Denbigh, there is a circular plaine on an hils side, with about 24. seates in it, some greater, some lesser, cut out of the maine Rocke; and by the Country people called K. Arthurs table. Camden makes mention of another, a round trench of earth so called, in Cumberland. These I conceive to have beene his tables, in the times of warre: that Prince being much in action, almost alwaies exercised, and in such times, the grasse is commonly the best Carpet of a Soldier. Who list to see the brave achievements of these Knights, let him consult the volume compiled by Caxton, where both their number and performances, are alike augmented. Mich. Drayton in the 3. song of his Poly-Olbion, speaks of Camelot and Carleon;

Itiner. Camb.
l. i. c. 5.

In Belgis.

In his Annals.

leons; and in the 4. of Winchester. No marvaile if he adde not Windfore, which doth best deserve it : for he consulted on-ly with the common Romances, and the Brittainish historie, (from whom and whom alone, out common writers also have taken whatsoever they have any where delivered to us of that Prince) who speake not of it. But howsoever take along his Muse with you.

*Like Camelot what place was ever yet renownd ;
Where, as at Carleon oft, he kept his Table Round ;
Most famous for the sports of Pentecost so long,
From whence all famous deeds and brave achievements sprang :*

And in the fourth Canto.

————— they report
*The Pentecost prepared at Carleon in his Court ;
That tables ancient seate: her Temples they preferre.
Of Camelot they sing, and thon of Winchester.*

(4) But to proceede. This institution gave the hint, as before I said to such Knightly Orders, which since those times have beene invented : especially with us in England, who have beene alwaies æmulous of King Arthur's glories. For Arthur's table questionlesse begat that of Mortimer, and that of Mortimer begat that of King Edward the third, which was a preamble or preludium to the institution of the Garter. Of Mortimer a noble Baron it is said by Walsingham, that he erected a Round Table at Killingworthe (neere Coven-try) for 100. Knights and as many Ladies : to which there was great confluence out of diverse Countries, to exercise the seates of Armes. Illustris miles Rogerius de Moreno mari apud Killingworth, Ludum Militarem, quem vocant Rotundam Tabulam, centum Militum & tot Dominarum instituit : ad quam pro Armerum exercitio, de diversis regnis confluxit Militia multa nimis, as that Author hath it, Anno 1280. Now that which Mortimer then did out of love to chivalry, was after imitated by our 3. K. Edw. for his necessary assistance.

For

In Edw. I.

For being, as he was, imbarcked in a tedious warre for his right in France, and then abandoned by the Emperour Ludovicus Bavarus, who had before made him his Vicar in the Empire: hee was compelled to thinke upon another project, to repaire himselfe. This was to build in Windsore a Round Table, and thereunto to call out of forraigne nations, such men of qualitie as might be serviceable to him in his warres: and give them such munificent entertainment, as might binde them to him. Rex Edwardus fecit convocari plures artifices ad castrum de Windsore, et cepit edificare domum, qua rotunda tabula vocaretur, as it is in Walsingham. The compasse of this house or table, was 600. foot: the charges which went weekly to the entertainment of the company, amounted at the first to 100. pound, but afterwards by reason of his many warres, reduced to twenty. This by the Author is placed in Anno Dom. 1344. and in the eighteenth of that King: William de Montacute, first Earle of Salisbury of that name, and King of Man, being at the first jousts here held, so sorely bruised, that hee died soone after. Froissard who lived about those times, mentions the beautifying of this Castle, the same yeere with Walsingham. But this he makes the reason of the confluence of so many militarie spirits at that place and time: not to be feasted at the Kings Round table which he speakes not of, but to be present at the institution of the Garter, the which hee placeth in this yeere. In that deceived, that he distinguished not this meeting, this confluence of gallant spirits, for Tilt and Tournament; from that which followed sixe yeeres after, in the same place: what time indeed, that noble order was erected. To proceed therefore to the Round Table, built by King Edward here at Windsore, in imitation of King Arthur, it brought not with it that effect which was expected for Philipp de Valois, being then King of France, and knowing that this magnificence of King Edward aimed onely at his overthrow: conceived it safest for the estate of his affaires, to countermine and worke with him. For this cause therefore, cepit & ipse edificare rotundam tabulam in terra sua, Idibid. &c. he caused around table also to be erected in his Court; that that so he might allure the souldierie of Italie and Almaine to his owne partie: ne ad regis Anglia tabulam properarent, and keepe them from resorting to the Court of the King of England. A prudent counsaile verily, and such as sorted very well in the event.

(5) King Edward disappointed of this project, quickly resolved upon another; such as might be more fast, and binding, then that formerly intended: which was to institute an order of a choyce companie of Knights, who both in oath and honour, should be bound to adhere unto him, and not to flit away upon the first tidings of a greater entertainment. Besides, it had pleased God to blesse him lately with many signall victories against French and Scottish: King David taken prisoner, King Philip overthrowne at Crecie, the Towne of Calice wonne and made a Colonie of English. For this cause therefore, not onely to oblige his militarie men unto him in a stronger tie, then that of princely entertainment; but also both to recompence and incourage such, as had most notably deserved it: it pleased him to ordaine a most noble order and society of Knight-hood; so to adorne their valour manifested in the warres, with honour, the reward of vertue. This the blacke Booke of Windsore tellifieth to be King Edward's purpose, in devising of this order; the honour due to God onely, being preferred before it, in the intencion of the founder. Iste Edwardus 3. Anno regni sui 23. cum de Gallis atque Scotis plus semel illustrissime triumphasset, ad dei cultum cui omnia retulit accepta; & ad honestamenta militaria quorum fideli opera tam feliciter usus esset, præclarissimum animum applicuit. This project he communicated first unto the principall Knights and Lords of all his Kingdome; amongst the which it was received, as well it might, parsi laticia plausus, with great ioy and approbation. The rather, because they saw that by this meanes, per magnum pietatis, nobilitatis & virtutis incrementum, a great increase was like to bee of pietie, nobilitie, and all vertuous qualities: and that both they amongst themselves, and Forraigners with them, uno amore paceque facilius cœrent, rent, should be more easily united in all true affections. This thus resolved upon, and such elected to this honour as hee thought fittest to participate thereof, and bee the founders of this order: hee did forthwith dispatch his Heraulds to Germany, France, Scotland, Burgundie, and the Netherlands, Ut in statam Windesore celebrisatem proxime futuram, equites & Armigers convenirent, that Knights and Squires, such as loved action, might with safe conduct, at the time appointed, repaire to Windore, and there for fiteene dayes together, both before and after Saint Georges festivall, bee present at the Tiltings and other Martiall exercises. Nor was the Queene for her part, wanting to promote the cause. But to encourage their exploits, and grace the action, cum trecentis & formosissimis dominabus & generis & amictus honore conspicuis interfuit, was present at the Iousts, attended with 300. Ladies, the most beautifull of all the Kingdome, and such as were most eminent both for birth and braverie. This was not done without good counsaile; there being no such spurre to valour and heroicke resolutions, as the love of Ladies. So farre the Register at Windore. And thus this honourable order was, as wee see, begun and instituted with great solemnitie upon Saint Georges day, Anno 1350. being the 23. of that Princes raigne. A Prince of a most absolute and accomplished vertue: The thunderbolt of warre, as some called Antiochus, and in the times of peace, nothing inferior to any of the Legislators, so much celebrated in the best ages. Briefly we may affirme of him, as the Historian of Augustus, the fittest parallell that I can finde for him, amongst famous Princes: hominandesse, qui omnibus omnium gentium viris, magnitudine sua induitur sit caliginem. Of this heroicke order as himselfe was one, so he appointed his successours, Kings of England, to be the chiefe thereof, by the name of Soveraigne, or Supremus. The number of the Knights hee instituted to be 26. no more, ut pretium faceret raritas: nor ever have our Kings exceeded in the number, but still confined themselves unto it; that so the order might still keepe its primitive and native lustre. An order of that choyce eminencie, ut maximos quosque reges non parni- In Edm. 3.

In regisro Ordinis,

tuerit in id venire collegium, as Polydore hath truly noted; that the most mighty Kings of Christendome have reckoned it a speciall honour to be chosen of it. Now lest it should happen here, ut populus qui foris dominabatur, saltem domi serviret, in the words of Florus; that those which by their order, are fellows and companions to the greatest Princes, should not be honoured in some measure amongst our selves: it was enacted in the thirteenth yeere of Queen Elizabeth, that in the house of Commons at all times of Parliament, such of this order as were below the ranke of Barons, should take precedencie of all whomsoever; the Treasurer and Controller of the household excepted onely. And by an order of King James, in the tenth yeere of his raigne, precedencie is given them in all places, and upon all occasions (so the decree runnes) before the younger sonnes of Viscounts and Barons, and before all Baronets; any use, custome, ordinance, or other thing to the contrary notwithstanding.

(6) This order is called properly of Saint George, but commonly the Garter. The order of Saint Georges Knights, because that King had chose Saint George to be the Patron both of his kingdome and his order: but why the Garter, is not so well agreed upon amongst our Authors. Some have conceived, as Camden tels us, that from his owne Garter, given forth as a signall of a battaile that sped fortunately, he called his order of the Garter: Speads otherwise, for that in a battaile wherein he was victorious, hee had given the word Garter for his signall: and Selden, that the Garter was used for some successfull symbole, before his successfull battaile, (perhaps he meaneth that of Crecie.) Others there be that have referred it to King Richards Garter, mentioned in the former chapter: and verily the blacke booke of Windsore doth give some countenance unto this conjecture. for there we are informed, that by the apparition of Saint George, as the King imagined, it came into King Richards minde, to tye about the legges of his choycest Knights, a leatherne Garter, such onely being next at hand to which in case they played the men, and came off with victorie, fulgidius et aureum insigne successurum erat; a richer and more costly token of their wel-deserving, should in time succcede. And then it followeth, that afterwards being returned into his kingdome, hee purposed to ordaine some famous order, and to entitle it to S. George: sed quod ipse non prestitit, Edwardus postea adimplevit; but that which he accomplished not, was performed afterward by King Edward. This probably might occasion, that as the order was intituled to Saint George, so it was also denominated of the Garter, that being the first motive to indeere Saint George unto our nation. But that which I conceive most likely to be the reason of this name, was King Edwards purpose or intention, in making choyce rather of the Garter, then any other part of the whole habit of the order, for their constant wearing: and that hee did in two regards. First, that thereby they should bee mindefull to stand manfully to their Sovereigne, or any other Prince that should employ them with his leave in a righteous quarrell. For so the forme of words used antiently at the putting on the Garter, doe affirme unto us, viz. Ad laudem omnipotentis Dei, intermate matris eius, & S. Georgij martyris, cinge tibiam tuam hoc insigni subligaculo, &c. quo viz. moneris ut valeas et velis in iusto bello quod solum inibis, stare firmiter, agere fortiter, et vincere feliciter. A second purpose noted in the Register of the Institution, is that as by their order, they were ioyned together as in a fast tye of amitie and concord: so by their Garter, as a bond of love and unitie, they might bee kept in mind to effect each other. Sic huic ordini cum nominibus, vestes et ornamenta coaptavit, ut omnia hec ad amicitiam, concordiam, et reliquam virtutem tendere, nemo non intelligat. Which combination of mindes, and association of affections, lest possibly it might be thought to have some other end in it, then what was iust and honourable, ad adversandum in omni re non male facta malam interpretationem, as the booke hath it: hee caused that French Motto or Impresse to be wrought in with it, which is still observed; that viz. of Honi soit, qui mal y pense, Shame bee to him that evill thinketh.

thinketh. In the new modell of statutes, made by King Edward the sixt, or rather by some under him; these reasons, "both of them are exprest as followeth: viz. that his "most noble Ancestours, Kings of England, had made a "certaine fellowship and colledge as it were of Knights, to "breede and maintaine a certaine amitie and mutuall agree• "ment in all honest things, and thereupon devised that "they in token of unitie and concord should weare about "their legges a certaine Garter, whereby they should de-
 "clare to all men, that for their Countrie and Gods cause, "they would be ready valiantly and manfully to spend not "onely their goods, but their lives also, and for this cause "had called this fellowship the order of the Garter. So farre these statutes did agree with the ancient copies. And why not thus? why might not this most noble order bee as well denominated from the Garter, worne by the Knights about their legges; as those in France denominated of the Starre, because they weare a Starre in their Caps or Bonnets; those of the Golden Fleece, so called by reason of the toysen d'Or, borne about their neckes, or in the antient Roman Empire, those called Moréçwos, from their Belts or Girdles about their middles. I adde this onely that the Garter like the band about the faggot in the Apologue, was a most fit memento to aduise them this, that if they held together in the bond of love and amitie, whereof the Garter was a symbole, they could not easily be broken.

(7) I know there goeth a tale of a Ladies Garter, which falling from her in a dance, the King tooke up: and that when many of his Nobles which stood by, laughed at it, he answered that great honour should ere long bee done unto that Garter, and thereupon devised this order. But this I hold to be a foolish idle Romance, derogatorie both to the order and the founder. Polydore Virgil, who first of any that I know, committed it to writing, builds not upon record, as a wise man would; but onely upon fama vulgi, the trifling and ungrounded talke of the common people: nor can he tell whereon to fasten, whether the Garter were regina

In Edw. 3.

regina aut amica, either Queenes, or else some other Ladies, the Kings Mistresse. Nor doth he name that Mistresse neither, if such there were. This tale compared with that, which Froissard hath reported of that Kings affection to the Countesse of Salisbury, hath made some men beleeve, that sure that Mistresse whom Polydore hath not named, must needs be this Countesse. And others hearing that the blacke Prince, this King Edwards sonne, was passionately affected to the Lady Ioane of Kent, Countesse of Salisbury, as some call her, whom hee after married, mistooke the father for the sonne: and putting all together, have made that namelesse Lady spoken of by Polydore, to bee the Lady Ioane of Kent, Countesse of Salisbury. This is the petigrée, as I take it, of this common fable, and this wee purpose to examine: first, taking it for granted, that this Garter fell not from the Queene. For were it so, what lightnesse possibly could any one suspect to be in the King, in case he pleased to sloop and take up her garter: what jealousie could any of his Nobles have of this, which might occasion the suspected Prince to cleare his innocent purpose with an hemi soit. Nor could it be that Countesses, whom Froissard speaks of: supposing that such things as hee delivereth of the Kings affection to that Lady, were true and reall, as indeed they are not. That Lady he calls Alice, not Ioane: but she was called indeed by neither. Her name was Katharine, one of the daughters and coheires of the Lord William Grandison, wife of that Earle of Salisbury which was killed, as before we said, at the iousts in Windsore, sixe yeeres before the institution of the Garter. This is the Lady whom Froissard makes to bee the Kings Mistresse, and tels a faire tale of her, that she was besieged in Roxborough Castle, by the Scots (that Castle being by the King committed formerly to her husbands keeping, as he saith, who was now prisoner in France) and that the King comming to raise the siege, was himselfe surprized, not by the enemy, but her beautie. He tels us also, how hee solicited her chastitie, but was still repulsed: and how in honour of her, and to enioy her company, hee held a solemne iousts at London, but of her Garter not a word. Bandello an

Hist. Scot. l. 15.

Hist. Scot. l. 9.

In registr. Cantu-
ar. lib. 1. f. 11. p.

Italian (if Drayton doe report him rightly) addes that hee had so farre prevailed on the Earle of Kent, the Ladies father, as to mediate for him. Of all this there is nothing true, but that the Earle of Salisbury was then prisoner in France, when Roxborough Castle was besieged. For first, the Earle of Salisbury had not the keeping of that Castle. The Scottish Writers who best know the businesse of their owne Country, say the contrary: Hector Boetius affirming, that King Edward gave Sterling Castle unto William Montacute; and Roxborough not unto him, but one William Felton, (as he calls him) a man of speciall merit in those times, and in the actions then on foot. Secondly, neither did King Edward raise the siege: the same Boetius telling us, that the Towne and Castle were both taken, most of the Garrison slaine, Felton the Governour of the Towne, and the Earle of Salisbury, both made prisoners. Vnto which, Buchanan agrees, as for the taking of the Towne, and of the Governour: but for the Earle of Salisbury he rather thinks, a Gallus in Gallia captum, that he was taken by the French in France, as indeed he was. That of Bundello is so foolish, that it needs no confutation: the Earle of Kent not being father to that Lady, said to be besieged in Roxborough; or had he beene, yet he was dead tenne yeeres before the siege of Roxborough, which happened in the yeere 1341. Hence we conclude, that the amica spoken of in Polydore, was not that Countesse of Salisbury, of whom Fraissard and Bundello fable. Nor could it be the Lady Ioane, once the reputed wife of the second William, Earle of Salisbury: her marriage with that Earle having alwaies beene so questionable, especially both before and at the institution of the order, that it may well be doubted, whether the stile or title of Countesse of Salisbury, might at that time be given her, if at all it could at any. The case was this, this Lady Ioane being the daughter of the Lord Edmund, Earle of Kent, was privately contracted, per verba de presenti, to Sir Thomas Holland, carnalis inter eos copula consecuta, (I speake out of the Popes Bull) the contract being consummate by carnall knowledge. But afterwards, before the publication of the contract, eadem Thomas in remotis tunc agente, &c. the said Sir Thomas being beyond the Seas in the Kings service; William de Montacute, Earle of Salisbury, did marry her in facie ecclesie, in the open Church, and so detained her from her husband. Hereupon Holland now returned, and sensible of the iniurie, makes complaint unto Pope Clement, of that name the sixt, and he on due deliberation, commended the full cognizance of the cause to Ademare, Cardinall of Saint Anastasia. Ademare, after some time spent in it, being called home; the Pope appointed Bernard, Bishop of Porto, to decide the controverſie: who after many trifling and long delays, adjudged the Lady unto Holland, and hee petitioning his holinesſe for execution of the ſentence, it was accordingly committed to the Bishop of Norwich and London. This Bull is dated at Neignen, where this Pope reſided, the thirteenth of November, and of his Popedome the eighth yeere, which falleth iuſt into the yeere 1350. and in the ſeventh moneth after that Saint Georges day, whereon this noble order was firſt inſtituted. So that allowing any reaſonable quantity of time to intervene betweene the firſt complaint, and the ſinall ſentence; (as certainly proceedings of that kinde, in ſo high a Court, and againſt adverſaries of ſo great power, are exceeding dilatorie) during which time, there was a ſeparation to bee made of courſe, betweene the Lady and the Earle; it followeth that about the time of the foundation of the Garter, or rather ſome good time before it, if at all ever, ſhe could not bee accounted as the wiſe of Montacute, and therefore not Counteſſe of Salisbury, as the fable makes her. Or ſay ſhee were, and that ſhe were King Edwards Miſtreſſe, meant by Polydore, who can ſuppoſe that the blacke Prince, a man accompliſhed with all vertue, would marrie with his Fathers Miſtreſſe, or one at leaſt, with whom his Father was ſuſpected to be too familiar. Rather I thinke, that the young Prince affecting her, (as certainly ſhee was a Lady of incomparable beauty) and by the people generally called the faire Maide of Kent, on ſome miſtake it was imputed to the King; and then this tale ioyned unto that in Froiffard, begat a third; whereby the fable was made perfect, as before I noted. Adde hereunto, that if the motto or impresse had reflected upon this occasion onely of the Ladies Garter, be she what she will: either the publike Registers had specified it, which they doe not, or else the Kings of England, some of them had ere this deserted it, as vaine and scandalous, which they have not done. Hence I conclude for certaine, as before I said, that all this Legend of the Queene or the Ladies Garter, is but a vaine and idle Romance, derogatory both to the Order and the Founder.

/adit.

Camden in Aurebat.

(8) Not to stay longer on this matter, let us a little look upon the seate and habitation, as it were, of this noble Order, the fairest and most stately of our English Palaces. A place first built by Arthur, as before wee said, to bee the seate of his Round Table: and as it seemeth, it continued a chiefe house of the English Kings, when they had tooke it from the Britons. Edward the Confessor, to endow the Church of Westminster, which in part he built, gave it with the appurtenances, to the Monkes thereof, as an endowment and perpetuall inheritance (so the Charter runneth) to the praise of Almighty God, and to the use and behoofe of those which serve him. Long the Monkes had not held it, when the Norman Conquerour liking the situation of it both for State and pleasure, compounded for it with the Convent, and gave them other lands in exchange thereof. He having thus possessed it, beautified and rebuilt the Castle. Henry the first, his sonne, added a Church or Chappell to it, and therewithall a Colledge or society of Canons, eight in number. Henricus primus (saith the Register at Windsore) optime se facturum intellexit, si tam pulchra substitutionis arci, Sacerdotale collegium adderet. Afterwards Edward the third, being here borne, and having founded in it the most noble Order of the Garter, Anno 1359. incepit novum edificium in castello de Windsore, as it is in Walsingham, began anew to build and beautifie that Castle: which by degrees, and severall Princes, was brought to that perfection which now it hath. So for the Church, as hee first founded it unto the blessed blessed Virgin Mary, and Saint George of Cappadocia, lo came it to that beauty in the which wee now behold it, by severall meanes. Edward the fourth began the wallis of the present fabricke, and went no further. Henry the seventh, brought it unto the roose, and left it: Sir Reginald Bray, one of the order of the Garter, being a principall agent in it. But for the vaulting of it, it was done of the sole charge of the Deane and Canons: Christopher Vise-Wick, a great Minister of that Princes, being then the Deane. The totall of which charge came to 100. pound the vaulting, and foure pound onely the embattelling, as appeareth by an old Deede, betweene the Deane and Chapter, and the workemen, now in the hands of the right honourable, the Earle Marshall, which he had of the Bishop of Chichester, sometime Canon there. The College here, (not to include the Knights which are 26,) consisteth of 13. Canons secular, whereof one was Custos; Kingstone, the fourth Custos being the first that was entituled the Deane: as also of 13. Canonici minores, Vicars, or Petit-Canons, now but seven onely; of 13. secular Clerks, and as many Chorasters. The poore Knights, as they call them, which are here founded, were first intended to be 26, answerable to the number of the Order: but they are onely 13. whereof one is the Governour; and those not settled till the raigne of Queene Elizabeth. Henry the eighth indeed bequeathed their land unto them for their maintenance; which Edward, D. of Somerset, after long suit and much expence, did in part make good. After, Queene Mary built their houses; her successor Queene Elizabeth, gave them statutes, and King James increased their maintenance, by adding twelve pence per diem, paiaible quarterly out of the Exchequer, whereas their pay is monethly which they receive from the Deane and Chapter. Each of which Knights is to have also yeerely for their Livery, a Mantle of blew or purple cloath, with an escoccheon of Saint George embroydered on the left shoulder of it, but not circled with the Garter: which they weare constantly at the time of divine service. Before they onely were as Pensioners and Corradists, and had some small allowance.

The 9. House
Rich. 1. 1212

allowance thence, but lived not there : there being sometimes more of them, and sometimes fewer; no certaine number. For maintenance of this College, the K. the founder, endowed this Church with a good revenue : which partly by the other founders, and partly by the bounty of succeeding Princes, was once well improved. But after, by the iniquity of the times, and the wretchednes of some Deanes; much of the lands was aliened, and some made over in long leases, not yet expired : whereas by the ordinances of their first foundation, it was not lawfull for them to farme out any of their lands, for above five yeeres. Besides their staple rents, the benefit of the offerings, made by the fellows of the Order (which then came to no small matter) were once wholly theirs. They also had the Saint Anthony pigges over all England, which being fatted by the people, of each litter one, and after sold away by the Colledge bailiffs, came to 1000. marks the yeere : which meanes accrewd unto them, by the favour of K. Edw. the 4. who did appropriate unto the S. Anth. hospitall in Lödon : The offerings at Sir Iohn Shornes Shrine, in North-Marston, Com. Buckingham, one which was said to have conjured the Divell into a boote; being worth 500. lib. per annum, were theirs also : the Vicarage of which Towne, was appropriated to them by King Henry the seventh, to make them recompence for some lands embezeled from them, to the value of 400. marks yearly. But now both these are lost, and all other casualties, which the devotion of those times did bring in unto them. The fellows of the Order, are the Patrons of this Church, some few have beene Benefactors also : Iohn D. of Bedford, William de la Pole D. of Suffolk, and some others. As Benefactors, they are all praied for, and quarterly commemorated by the Prebends ; in the forme

„ that followeth. First for the Praier, it is this. O Lord God, „ our heavenly Father and mercifull Saviour Iesus Christ, „ assist our most worthy King continually with thy holy „ Spirit, that as he is antiently and truly descended from „ the most noble Princes of this Realme, and the bountifull „ Patrons and Founders of this Order and Church, so he „ may sl. p. 190.

 grand high. p. 171.
 p. Twm. p. 171.

may proceed in all good works, for sustentation of learning and helpe of poverty. And that all Noble men of this Realme, especially such as bee companions of this most honourable Order of the Garter, may likewise dispose themselves in honour and vertue at all times; that God thereby may bee the better honoured, the Common-wealth served, and their fame remaine to their posterity; and that we may all continue in the true Faith, and walke in good works that God hath appointed us, through Iesus Christ, &c. Amen. Then for the Commemoration, it is thus. We praise and thanke thee O Lord, in all the Noble Kings Patrons of this Order, and our Benefactors thy servants; humbly beseeching thy Majesty, as they for their times honorably and charitably did bestow their gifts to our reliefe, so we may faithfully use them, to the end that thereby others may be moved with such examples, to provide for good and learned Ministers to teach thy holy Word, and to be mercifull in relieving the poore, through Iesus Christ our Lord and Saviour. In lieu of which good offices, the fellows of the Order, are bound by oath, to keepe as much as in them is, and to defend, the privileges and possessions of the College: Ut viz, pro virili invarent supportarent, & defenderent, regium Sancti Georgij Collegium infra Castrum de Windesore, tam in possessionibus, quam in aliis rebus quibuscunque, vel ante datis vel postea demandis; according as in the 19. yeere of King Edward the fourth, it was enacted in their Chapter.

(9) This Order, as before is said, is dedicated to Saint George, whom King Edward having invoked in the Battle of Callice, and as Du Chesne relates, in that of Crecy also, had made the Patron of his Kingdome. This noted by our common Authors, but most authentically to bee proved from the originall Charter of the institution. For there King Edward tells us, that to the honour of Almighty God, and of the blessed Virgin our Lady Saint Marie, and of the glorious Martyr Saint George, Patron of the „ right

„ right noble Realme of England, and to the exaltation of „ the holy Catholick Faith, he had ordeined, erected, esta„ blished and found within the Castle of Windfore , a „ Company of 26. noble Knights to be of the said noble „ Order of Saint George, called the Garter. Hence is it, that in Latine Authors, they are called Equites Georgiani, Saint Georges Knights : and in some also of the English. Nor doe they onely beare his name, but they weare his Image ; garnished with pearles and pretious stones : appendant to their Collars, when they weare their robes ; pendant at ordinary times about their necks, in a golden chaine, or blew ribband. Vpon which circumstance both of the name and

Hi. of the world
 p. 1. l. 2 c. 7. Sect.
 3. f. 5

of the George, as they use to call, Sir Wals. Raleigh grounds himsef and his opinion, from hence affirming, that the killing of the Dragon, is a thing historicall. Hee reasons „ thus. And though (saith he) for the credit of the killing „ of the Dragon, I leave every man to his owne beliefe :
 „ yet can I not but thinke, that if the Kings of England „ had not some probable record of that his memorable act „ among many others ; it is strange that the Order full of „ honour, which Edward the third founded, and his suc„ cessours Royally continued should have borne his name:
 „ considering the world had not that scarcity of Saints in „ these dayes, as that the English were to make such an e„ rection, upon a fable and person fained. So hee. And this I well allow of, in relation to the Saint, whose being, and whose being one of speciall eminency among the Saints it justifies sufficiently. But I perswade my selfe, it cannot well be used in defence of his incounter with the Dragon :
 as being coldly advocated in the Register of Windfore, so often cited ; which gives it for a matter doubtfull, and adjudged Apocryphall. For saith the Regiller, De Dracone vero liberataque regia stirpis nitidissima puella, quod narrat, non est ut anxie defendendum esse censeam, cum id Apocryphum nonnulli clamitent. Yet so, that neither he is willing, ut iustus obstinate condemnetur, that on the other side it be too peevshly condemned ; as that which then had found a generall enter-

entertainment in the world. But of the killing of the Dragon we have spoke already, in a place more proper: touching upon it onely here, to shew that neither of the two, neither Saint Georges name, nor Image, borne by the fellows of this Order; may be, upon just grounds allcaged by any, to justifie that exploded story.

(10) Others there are, so farre from justifying all the Historie of Saint George; that willingly they would approve of no part of it: and therefore as they have made the whole Story of Saint George, to bee symbollicall; so have they made it also of the same nature, in particular relation to this Order. Thus Doctor Reynolds in his first of the Idolatries of Rome, Verum illustres ejus ordinis heroes melius jam edocti atque eruditi, intelligunt Georgiam suam non Cappadocem esse sed Symbolicum; quo exsistantur & monentur ut Draconem oppugnent & bestiam, Id est, Romanum Antichristum. The nobles of that famous Order, intrusted better then before, conceive it rightly; that this their George, hath no relation unto him of Cappadocia; but meereley is Symbolicall: by which, saith hee, they are admonished and advised, to labour to destroy the Dragon and the Beast of the Apocalypse, Id est, the Antichrist of Rome. And to this purpose Doctor Bois, late Deane of Canterbury; I write not this, saith he, Gosp. s. Sund. after Easter. (having said all the worst hee could) to dishonour that Noble Order of the Garter. For under correction, and Salva semper honore ordinis, I take the George, which adometh those right honourable worthies, to bee Symbolicall onely: signifying that a valiant Knight should bee alwaies ready, to fight against the Dragon and other enemies of the Church and State whatsoever. Which words of theirs may be approved also so farre, as that this use may commendably be made of it: but if they were thus spoken, either in reference to the Story, or to the first intention of the founder, there is not any thing more false, or more poorly wrested. For

if

Stat of Edw. 6
M.S.

if in reference to the Story, if the whole Story must be onely Emblematicall; no doubt but they that first devised it, would have apparelled that their Embleme, or Symbolicall Knight, with a name fit for him: and not have called him George; which signifieth an husbandman. Or if in reference to the first intention of the founder; What reason had King Edward the sixth or his Counsaile rather, to order it so rigidly, that not the Image of Saint George as now they wear it, should be appendant to the Collars of the Order: but onely of an armed Knight upon his Horse, which could not possible reach home to his new Embleme, this new Symbolicall devise of our late reformers. Yet I deny not, but that some such use as they imagine, may commodably be made of it, For by the Charter of the Institution it appears plainly, that this most excellent Order was first ordeyned, unto the honour of Almighty God, and to the exaltation of the Holy Catholicke Faith. And in the Statutes of the Order, it is a cause sufficient to a Knight to be refused at the election; yea and degraded also after his installation: that he hath bene convicted and attainted of heresie and armour against the Faith Catholicke; or hath for any such offence suffered any paines, or conviction publicke. Add therunto that when it is appointed that their Banners, Swords, and Helmets, shall be placed above their stalls: it is to this intent & purpose, to signify (so saith the Statute) that they doe beare them in defence of Holy Church, as all true Knight-hood doth require. So that wee see (if that will please them) that there are many items in this excellent Order, which may well lesson and instruct the Companions of it, still to oppose the Divell, that old Dragon, and all his instruments what ever, in maintenance of the Gospel and Gods true Religion. But if the publicke Register may be credited in this particular, as without doubt it may; the George was given them as a part of their ordinary habit: to put them in rememmembrance, that as their Saint and Patron, was in his time, a faithfull Champion of the Church of Iesus Christ, so should they also bee the Guardians, and Defenders of the Christian Faith. Insigne Georgij Thoracen protegens, pectus illud in memariam vocat, ut quemadmodum ipse proprius eorum Deus, Christi, & Sponsa ejus Ecclesia, fidelis & gloriosus Miles extitit: Sic & ipsi, Christi Christianaque Religionis fideles Milites & Propugnatores evadant; As that Booke hath it. For which cause doubtlesse, Geoffrey Chancer, in the preparatory Sonnet to his Canterburie Tales, doth thus advise them.

—————*But for Gods pleasure
And his mothers, and in signifiante
That yee beene of Saint Georges liverie
Doeth him service and knightly obeisance,
For Christs cause is his, well knowne yee.*

I am not able to affirme it; but probably some such matter also was intended, when it was enacted, so precisely in the Statutes, That none of this most Noble Order, shall bee seene openly without his George: and that it may not be ingaged, aliened, nor sold, nor given away, for any need, cause, or necessity, whatsoever. This I am sure of, that this their constant and continuall wearing of Saint Georges Image, may bee a faire instruction unto all of this Heroicke Order, never to lay aside Saint Georges resolution: of dying if need be, for the Faith of Christ, and in defence of his Religion and the holy Church; that so they may at last, receive with him the blessed and imaccessible crowne of glory, in the heaven of heavens.

CHAP. III.

(1) The manner of the election of Saint Georges Knights.
 (2) and their installation. (3) The order how they sit in Saint Georges Chappell. (4) The honour done unto the Sovereigne by the rest of the companions. (5) The severall wayes whereby the places are made vacant. (6) An answer unto Polydore Virgil, and his misreporting of the statutes. (7) Saint Georges festiual, and the celebration of it. (8) The robes and habit of the Order. (9) The Officers which appertaine unto the Order, and their severall pensions. (10) Together with the honourarie robes and ensignes which belong unto them.

(1)

Having thus spoken of the institution of this most noble Order, the names and seate thereof, in the former Chapter: it now remaines that we speake somewhat also of their elections, installations, and convenings; their robes and festiual; and such other things as appertaine unto the ornament and honour of the same.

To begin therefore with the elections, wee must first take notice, that the Kings of England, are (as wee said before) the Sovereignes of this noble Order. To whom it appertaines to have the declaration, reformation, and disposition of the lawes and statutes of it, which being first devised by that victorious Prince, King Edward, by whom the Order first was founded, have beene revised and altered, and enlarged, as occasion was, by the Kings succeeding. As also it belongs to them, or to their lawfull Deputie by them nominated nominated and authorized, to solemnize the Festivals, and hold the Chapters; and choose into the Order, whom they esteeme to be most worthy of that honour, and like to bee the greatest ornament unto it, yet so that for this last particular, sixe at the least of the Fellowes of the said Order, doe convene at the election, and concurre in it: the residue of them being all warned to be present, and such as faile of their attendance, without iust cause, such as the Sovereigne shall approve, to be amerced: Such of them as appeare at the time and place appointed, are to array themselves in the Mantle proper to their order, before they goe into the Chapter-house, or place of election: for want of which, his Maiestie now being, then Prince of Wales, and Philip, Earle of Montgomery, were in the 22. of King James, debarred at that time from giving of their suffrages. As for the forme of the election, the yongest or puish of the Order begins first, and nominateth nine, viz. three Princes: under which name they comprehend all, from Earles inclusively, and upwards; three Barons, viz. Lords and Vicounts, and three Knights Bachelours or Bannerets: so ascendendo the next followeth. He that hath most voyces, upon calculation, is pronounced elected: yet so, that commonly the Sovereigne useth to impart his pleasure to the rest, that they may all concurre with him. Yea, and sometimes the Sovereigne, as he may by statute, pronounceth him to be elected, quem digniorem regnoque suo magis idoneum esse indicabit; whom hee conceives most worthy, and like to bee most profitable to his affaires: as Casimire King of Poland was in the 28. of Henry the sixt, pronounced elected by the King; though he was named by one onely of the sixe Electors. Nor doe they altogether goe by way of scrutinie, but sometimes have proceeded viva voce; as not long since, in the election of James, Marquesse Hamilton, in the raigne of King James. of happy memory. In nominating of the partie, two things there are, which they especially observe. First, that hee be a Gentleman of name and Armes for three discents, both by the Father and the Mother. For which cause when the Garter was reproachfully taken from the Lord William Paget, by /adri.

Z

Dudley

Hist. of Ed. 6.
p. 143.

Regist. Windf.

Dudley of Norwumberland; that so it might be given to his eldest sonne, Iohn, Earle of Warwicke: he used this colour, to disguise that unworthy action; that the said Lord (as the first raiser of his house) was said to bee no Gentleman of bloud, neither by Father nor by Mother. So Sir Iohn Haywood tels the storie; The second thing to be observed, is that the partie nominated, be a Knight, and without spot or foule reproach. as viz. not convict of heresie, nor attaint of treason; nor by his prodigalitie and riot decaied in his estate, by meanes whereof hee is not able to conserve the honour of his Order; nor lastly, such as ever fled in the day of battaile, the Sovereigne or his Lievetenant being then present in the field. In all which cases, a Knight elected and installed, may, if it please the Sovereigne, be degraded also. I say it is observed, that the partie nominated, be a Knight; concerning which, there was a memorable case in the 17. of King Henry the eighth, which was this. The Lord Ross being elected of the Order, and installed, notice was given unto the King, that he was no Knight. A chapter thereupon being called, the installation was pronounced voyde, and afterwards the Gent. being Knighted by the King, was againe elected.

(2) The partie chosen by the Prince, if he be a stranger, is certified thereof soone after, by letters from the Sovereigne: and many times the statutes of the Order have been sent unto him to consider of them, whether or not he will accept of the election. But this is a matter meerely formall. For commonly our Kings are first well assured of the parties good affection to them, before they choose him: nor was there ever any King, or forraigne Prince, that hath refused it, but Philip, D. of Burgundie, and he refused it, by reason of some difference betwixt him, and Humphrey, Duke of Gloucester, about the Lady Iaqueline, whom D. Humphrey had then lately married. But other Princes, as by our Kings it is conferred upon them for an honour; so by them it is accepted also as a favour: the greatest pledge of amitie and faire correspondence betweene friendly Princes. Witnesse the letters letters Patents of the King of Sweden now being, whereby Master Henry Saint George, one of the Heralds, sent to invest the said King with the Order of the Garter, was created Knight. In which that King acknowledgeth, that by his Majesty of Great Britaine, his most deere brother and allie, he was elected of the Order: in arctioris amicitia nexum, & evidentissimum amoris erga nos sui perpetuò duraturus; as an assurance of his love, and a bond of amitie. So runnes the Patent, dated in his Campeat Darſawe, in the land of Prussia, Septemb. 26. Anno 1627. On this acceptance, the Sovereigne forthwith sends unto him by his Embassadour, and the chiefe Herald, or ſome other in his roome, the habit of the order, together with the Garter and the Collar, wherewith they presently doe invest him. And on the other side, the Prince or stranger so invested, within convenient time, send their sufficient deputie, with a Mantle of blue Velvet, to be installed in their roome at Saint Georges Church in Windsor. Which Deputie so employed, is of himſelfe to be of knightly ranke, and without reproach, that so hee may the better represent the person of the Prince elected. Vpon which ground of statute, there was a speciall dispensation made unto the Deputie of the King of Denmarke, installed in that Princes roome, Anno 1605. who neither was a Knight himſelfe, nor would receiue that order at King James his hand; quippe equeſtris ordo in usu non erat apud suos, as in the Register of Windsore, because the order of Knight-hood was not in use amongst his country-men. But if the partie chosen be a subiect of the Kingdome, the Garter is delivered to him presently on his election, to signifie that he is chosen into the order. Afterwards in the Chapter-house (for so it is ordained by statute) upon the reading of his commission before the Sovereigne or his Deputie, hee is invested with his Robe and Hood. Then followes the installment in the Quire at Windsore, performed with many grave and magnificent ceremonies, which done, he is presented with the Collar of his order, and from that time accounted as a fellow and Companion of it, and absolutely possessed of his place therein. Whereas in case he die before his installation, he is not to be reckoned as a fellow of it, to have priviledge thereby; save that in antient times, habebat missarum medietatem, as the statute tels us. These at their installations, have an oath administred unto them, that to their power, during the time they shall be Fellowes of the Order, they shall defend the honour, quarrels, rights, and Lordships of the Sovereigne; and that they shall endeavour to preserve the honour of the said Order; and all the statutes of it they shall well observe and keepe, without fraud and covin. Which oath is by the natives and subjects of the kingdome, taken absolutely, and in termes: but many times by strangers, relatively, and by halves; in reference to some former order, of the which they were. So when King Henry the third of France, was by the Earle of Darby invested with the Garter, Anno 1585. he tooke his oath to keepe the statutes of the order, in all points, qualegibus ordinis, S spiritus, & S. Michaelis non adversantur; wherein they were not opposite unto the order of Saint Michael and the holy Ghost; to which he had beene sworn before. Vpon which reason also, Fredericke, King of Denmarke, though he did ioyfully accept the habit of the order, refused to take the oath at all, because he had beene sworne before to the French King, at his installation in the order of Saint Michael.

/ ad h.

/ ad h.

Camden in Elixib.

Id. in Anno
1582.

(3) Being thus solemnly installed, and seated in the place belonging to them in the Chappell; their next care is to fasten an escocheon of their Armes in a plate of mettall upon the backe of their said stalls: which they remove, according as themselves, in order are advanced higher. And in that order doe they also change the places of their banners, swords and helmets; which are continually over their said stalls, during their being of the order. This onely is the difference, that at the death of any of the Knights of this noble order, their plate of Armes is left for ever to that stall, where last they sate, in remembrance of them: whereas the banner, sword, and helmet, are all taken downe, and offered with all due solemnities; the offering made by such of

of the surviving Knights, as by the Sovereigne shall be destined to that service. I said before, that they remove their plates and hachments (for so they call their swords, helmes, and banners in one word) according, as themselves, in order, are aduanced higher. For in this order they take place, according unto the antiquity of their creation, and not according to their titles, dignities, and estates: so that sometimes a Knight Bachelour hath place before an Earle or Baron, yea a Duke or Marquesse; as not long since, we had example in Sir Henry Lea Knight, keeper of the Armorie, who had precedencie of the Duke of Lenox. And so they goe also in this order to the Chappell, and sit accordingly at the table on Saint Georges Festivall. Onely in honour unto strangers, who be Dukes, or sonnes and brethren unto forraigne Kings and Princes: it is permitted by the statutes, that they take their roomes and places, according to their qualitie. But this is but a late indulgence. For antiently, whosoever was elected into the place of a Knight deceased, succeeded also in his stall: without respect of any qualitie or degree. If a King crowned, came in the place of a Knight Bachelour, whose stall was lowest, he sate there also: no difference being made betwixt Forraigners and Natives, but all accounted of as Fellowes. This is evident by the plates of severall Kings and Sovereigne Princes, placed in lower stalles; as will appeare anon out of two antient Tables hanging in the Quire of Windsore: as also from the first intencion of the Founder, who meant them all as Fellowes and companions of the same order, and therefore no prioritie to be challenged by any of them, no more then was in Arthurs Table, which hee imitated. Henry the seventh, as is supposed, made the alteration, as farre as it hath reference to forraigne Princes. The rest continued in those stalles, where, at first they sate, save that the Sovereignes reserved unto themselves this power: once in their lives (so saith the Statute) to make a generall translocation of all the stalles at their pleasure, except of Emperours, Kings, Princes, and Dukes, which alwaies were to keepe their places, except they were advanced higher.

„ In which translation never the lesse, the long continu„ ance in the Order, and the merit and worthinesse of the „ Knight was to be considered. That forme of sitting in their stalls which is now in use; viz the order of succession in seniority, came in by vertue of an act made in the 7. of Queene Elizabeth: as being thought more equall and without exception, then the other was.

Regist. Wind.

(4) Yet notwithstanding, though by the first intention of the founder, they were accounted all as fellows; the Sovereigne chalenging little more, then a priority, and precedencie, and that they have a disposing power in the elections, and other the solemnities which concerne the Order. Diverse things have beene since enacted, in honour of the Sovereigne. Particularly, that at their entrance in the Church, I meane the Quire, or Chappell Royall, after obeisance made to the high Altar, they are to doe like reverence to the Sovereigne, or in his absence, to his stall, which began on this occasion. John D. of Bedford Deputy for King Henry the 5. did in a Chapter held the 3. of May, Anno 1421. of that King the 9. enact by generall consent, that low obeisance should bee made by all the fellows of the Order unto the King, or in his absence to his stall. Which when the King observed as he was present at the evening service of the same day, hee signifie to all the fellows which then were present, Adulto rationabilium & convenientius esse, ut primum Regi vere supremo atque omnipotenti Domino Deo & ejus Altari, promi facti debitum impenderent honorem, in modum virorum Ecclesiasticorum, & deinde perimplerent id
 „ honoris, quod sibi sedilive suo oportere crederent: That hee „ would have them first to doe obeisance to the King of „ Kings, even to Almighty God, and his holy Altar, according „ as the Clergy then used to doe; and after, if they „ thought it fit, to him, or to his stall. This was then done accordingly, and is still continued; both at their entrance in the Church, and returning backe. Not to the Sovereigne onely, but in his absence doe they the like reverence unto his Deputy. Onely the difference is that the Deputy puts off his his Cappe to them, as they passe along; which the Sovereigne doth not. And for a further honour unto the Sovereigne it was enacted not long since, viz. in the 17. yeere of King James, that at the Royall Feast on Saint Georges day, when Garter King of Armes, proclaimes the Sovereignes stile or titles, in Latine, French and English, as the custome is: omnes commilitones (exceptis magnis Principibus) tantisper stent atque aperto capite, all the Companions of the Order (except Sovereigne Princes) shal rise up from their seates, and attend that ceremony, standing upon their feet, and their heads uncovered. Adde, that they are to waite upon the Sovereigne in the solemnity of their festivall, and to attend him from his great chamber to the Chappell, in procession, attired in the robes and full habit of the Order: not to depart, nor disrobe themselves, untill the Sovereigne, either by his example, or some other signall, gives them licence. Nequese exeunt, donec Supremus vel eius deputatus exuerit, exuendive tempus esse decreverit: as the blacke Booke of Windfore hath it. Other the punctualities of their due observance, I forbear to mention.

his

(5) Hitherto have we spoken of the election of Saint Georges Knights, of their admission, forme of sitting in their stals, and duties to the Sovereigne. A little would bee said of the meanes and waies whereby the roomes are voyded, and so place made for others, to succede by those elections which are three especially: viz. death, degradation, and surrendry. The second of the three, for here we will not speake of death, is degradation; a piece of iustice more to be commended where it may not, then where it may bee spared. The cases wherein degradation is allowed of, I have shewn already: but the examples of such as have bene finally devested, are not many. During the warres and buillings betweene Yorke and Lancaster, Butler the Earle of Ormond, Lionel L. Welles, and Galiard of Duras, were degraded utterly, and so were some attainted legally of treason in the times succeeding. Some for a time, have bene devested, and againe revested. William Lord Pager, which was so scorned fully

Camden, Eliz.
Anno 1563

Hab. Ch. in H. 6

Camden Eliz.
Anno 1560

fully degraded by Northumberland, was by Queene Marie with great honour, restored againe unto his Garter. And Sir Iohn Fastolfe, which for his valiantnesse had beene elected of the Order; was by the Duke of Bedford under whom hee served, and unto whom hee was great Master of the household, deuested in great anger, of his George and Garter; because he had departed from a battaile which the English lost, without stroke stricken. But afterwards, upon good reason, and excuse, by him alleaged in his defence, as certainly he was a wise and valiant Captaine (though on the stage they have beene pleased to make merry with him) he was restored unto his honour. The third and last meanes of avoydance, is by cession and surrendry; and hereof the examples also are but few. This I am sure of, (not to make further search into it) that Philip King of Spaine, being offended with Queene Elizabeth for altering Religion; and thereby alienated from the English: delivered backe to Viscount Montague, the robes and habit of the Order; where-withall, upon his marriage with Queene Marie, hee had beene invested. By which his Act, as the Historian hath observed, Cum Anglis amicitiam visus est prorsus ejurare; hee seemed to breake off utterly, all amity and friendship with the Realme of England; Tis true indeed, King Philip being once resolved to renounce his Order, was of necessity to send backe the Garter. For so it is ordeined amongst them, that even such of them as depart this life, are to take care especially that the Garter be sent backe unto the Sovereigne: by him, and the Companions of the said Order, to be disposed to some other. Examples in which kinde, are infinite and obvious.

Hist. Ang. l. 19

(6) I should now from the Knights, proceed in order to their Patron; and from their installation, to his Festivall: but that I first must meete an errour, by some accounted as a Law and Statute of the Order; and so delivered by tradition from hand to hand. Habent isti Equites certas Leges, quibus illud cum primis est constitutum, ut mutuo se iuvenc defendantque. They have (saith Polidore) certaine Lawes amongst them:

themselves, and this as one of the most principall of all, that they assist and defend each other, in all extremities and assaies. So he, but doubtlesse there is no such matter. Onely the Knights are bound by Statute, not to ingage themselves in the service of a forreine Prince, without licence from their Sovereigne: nor to beare armes on one side, if any of their fellowes bee already entertained upon the other. This is the ground of the report, for omnis fabula (as the Mythologists affirme) fundatur in Historia. Yet hereupon, Alphonso, Duke of Calabria, sonne unto Ferdinand King of Naples; knowing that Charles the 8. of France, threatned the Conquest of that Kingdome: did with greate importunity request, to be elected of this Order; as accordingly he was. Conceiving, that if once he were Companion of that Order, the King of England, as the Sovereigne thereof, would bee obliged to countenance and aide him, in his warr es against the French. Which hopes, as they were built upon a false and ruinous ground: so is it not to bee admired, if they deceived him. Polydore Virgil, who before accounted mutuall defence, to bee a Statute of this Order, doth in this passage overthrow his owne building: Concluding this relation of Alphonso and his investiture, with this note; Iam pridem ea consuetudo ferendi auxilij obsoletur, that long agoe that custome had beene out of use: He might as well have said, and more agreable unto the truth, it had never beene; for no such thing appeares at all upon the Statute. Therefore I rather thinke that Polydore mistooke himselfe in Alphonso's purpose: who as I verily am perswaded, desired this investiture into the Order, not so much out of hope of helpe from England, which lay too farre off; as to keepe up his reputation with the Italian Princes, who lay round about him.

(7) Having thus spoken of the election, installation, and other ordinances of this noble and Heroick Order, we will descend in the next place to give you notice of their Festivall: which they hold every yeere on Saint Georges day, unlesse there be some great occasion to deferre it. So

Poly-

Polydore, Ordo est D. Georgio ut bellatorum praesidi dicatus; quate Equites quotannis diem ei Sacrum, multis ceremoniis colunt.

been

This Order saith that Author, is dedicated to S. George, as the chiefe Saint and Patron of Military men; whose festiual they very solemnly observe, with many noble ceremonies. But what need Polydore have produced unto this purpose; since from the Statutes of the Order wee have a testimony farre more valid and authentickall. For there it is enacted, ut ubiubi fuerint modo libertate gaudeant, &c.

that wheresoever any of them be, if they bee at liberty, they shall attire themselves in the full habit of the Order: and be devoutly present at the divine service, both of the Vespers and the Day. But if they be within the Realme, they shall attend the Sovereigne, all of them; that they may be present with him at the holy Offices, and at their meate in the great Hall, in honour of their Saint and Patron. Such as are absent with a lawfull and allowable excuse, are not permitted to enter in their stalls the next feast after, but to sit bellow amongst the Chorasters: nor is he suffered at the offering, to goe amongst the other Knights, but of what ranck or seniority soever he shall be, he must offer last. After which penance donne, he is to come before the Sovereigne or his Deputy, and demand pardon for his fault; by whom at last he is appointed to goe unto his stall, in his first estate. But if he faile a second time, and be within the Realme, not having any excusation (so saith my Copy of the Statutes) allowable to the Sovereigne, or his Deputy, as is above said, he shall not enter into his stall from thenceforth, untill the time that hee have given and offered a Jewell on Saint Georges Akar, of the value of 20. marks of Silver of Troy, and from thenceforth hee shall double every yere the penalty, unto the time that he be reconciled: Nor are those punished onely which are absent, but also such as come late to the divine service, or not to the beginning of it, are not permitted, for that time, to take their places, but must abide below in the Chorasters seates, before their stalls: as not long since did Henry Earle of South-

Southampton in King James his time. : So punctually are they bound to observe the day, and the service of it. But to proceede to the solemnity of this Feast, the Knights as many of them as are present, are to attend both on the Vespers and on the Day it selfe, at Divine service; attired with the most rich and stately mantles of their Order, and gallantly adorned with their most rich and sumptuous Collars. In which their going to the Church, and at the offerings, and in sitting at the table, they goe and sit by two and two, every one with his fellow which is foreagainst him in his stall: and if by chance it happen that his fellow be not present, they doe both goe and sit alone, and have their messe unto themselves. I say if so it chance to happen. For all the fellowes are obliged, as before I said, to bee there personally present; without a just and reasonable cause, acceptable to the Sovereigne or his Deputy, and signified under their seale of armes by speciall letters of excuse. Other the pompe and rich magnificence of this feast, I forbear mention; as utterly unable to expresse it. The mind is then best satisfied in such things as this, when the eye hath scene them. Onely I adde, that for the place of this solemnity, it was appointed by the Statute, to be Windfore-Castle, the seate and Palace of the Order: or as the Poet calls it,

*The Garters Royall seate, from him who did advance
That Princely Order first, our first that Conquered France;
The Temple of Saint George, whereas his honoured Knights Upon his hallowed day observe their antient rites.*

Drayt. in Po's, Oib. song. 15.

And as it was appointed, so was it also there observed and celebrated, till the 9. of Queene Elizabeth: when it was ordered and enacted, that where the Sovereigne was, there should the feast be solemnized, nor was it after held at Windfore, in all her reigne, or often since.

(8) The

(8) The robes and habit which belong unto this order, and are worne onely upon solemne dayes, and great occasions, (besides the Garter and the George, worne commonly) are a Surcoate, a Mantle, and an Hood, all stately and magnificent, both for stuffe and fashion: together with a Collar made of pure gold, composed of Knots and Garters, enamelled with roses white and red; the image of Saint George richly set out with precious stones, appendant to it. Of these they are to have a Mantle laid up in Windsore Castle for them, to be in readinesse for any sodaine chance, which might require their presence in Saint Georges Chappell, or in the Chapter-house: besides, that there they are to solemnize the installations of their brethren, and performe their obsequies. Adde hereunto, that if they come within two miles of it, (except that they bee hindred by some weighty businesse) they are all bound by statute, to reparaethither, and putting on their Mantles, to goe into the Chappell, and there make their offerings. Neither at any time of the comming thither, should they depart from thence, till they have offered in like manner. Of ordinarie wearings there are onely three; the George, the Garter, and the deuce upon their Cloakes. The George, or image rather of Saint George, they weare about their necks continually, appendant either to a blue Ribband, or a little chaine. And is so constant and continuall a part of their daily habit, that it is ordered by the statute, that none be scene abroad, "or openly without his George: and that it may not bee "ingaged, aliened, nor sold, nor given away, for any need, "cause, or necessity whatsoever. The Garter is of blue, worne alwaies on the left legge, the impresse of it wrought with golden letters, and inchaied with pretious stones, and fastened with a buckle of gold, as with the bond of unitie and concord; to shew that there should be amongst them, a communion both of love and vertues. This seemes to bee the principall, as it is the denominating part of the whole habit. For presently it is given to him that is elected of the "order, in planum argumentū quod unus ordinis illius habendus "sit, in token that he is to be accounted of the order: wher-

as

"as his Robes are not given unto him till his installation.
 "And in case any of them bee scene abroad without his "Garter, he is to pay two crownes to any officer of the "order, who shall first claime it, unlesse they bee to "take a journey, for then it is sufficient to weare a blue Rib-"band under their bootes, to denote the Garter. Last of all, in the first yeere of our dread Sovereigne now being,
 "Aprill 27. 1626. it was thus enacted, that all Knights
 "and companions of the order, shall weare upon the left
 "part of their Cloakes, Coates, and riding Calsocks, at all "times when they shall not weare their Robes, and in all "places of assemblie, an escocheon of the Armes of Saint
 "George, i.e. a Grosse within a Garter, not enriched with "pearles or stones: in token of the honour which they "hold from the said most noble order: instituted and or"dained for persons of the highest worth and honour. So farre the statute. He which would see what speciall mysteries are fancied upon each part & partick of this habit (the last excepted) the colours, fashion, stufte, and what ever else may be imaginable: let him consult a Pamphlet, published 1631. by Bosquierus, it is entituled Catechismus ordinis equi- tum periscelidis Anglicanae, the Catechisme of the Garter, written by one Mondonius, once the Popes Nuntio in this Kingdome: composed affectedly after the vaine of William Durantes in his Rationale Divinorum. But such a piece of stufte, for dull conceits, and farre fetcht mysteries, and extravagancies, did I never meete with. How much more happily bath he which writ the poeme of the marriage between Tame and Isis, given us a brieft touch, both of the Patron, and of the Knights, and of their habit, thus as followeth,

*Auratos thalamos, regum praeclara sepulchra,
 Et quaecunque refert, nunc Windsoræ referre
 Desine. Cappadociæ quamvis sis clara Georgi Militia, procerumque cohors chlamydata nitenti
 Cincta periscelidis iuras, te lumine tanto
 Illustret, tantis radijs perstringit & orbem:
 Ut nunc Phryxæum spernat Burgundia vellus,*

Continuat

Contemnat coelestis variatos Gallia torques, Et cruce conspicuas pallas, Rhodus, Alcala et Elba, Solaque militie, sit gloria splendida vestra.

Windsore relate no more, the glorious things
In thee, thy gilded roofes, and Tombes of Kings.
Or that thou art so honour'd in the rites
Of George the Cappadocian Martyrs Knights.
Who clad in Mantles rich and circled round
The legge, with that the Garter so renown'd;
Doth so advance thy name, and with its raies
Splendant and glorious, so the world amaze:
That Burgundie her golden fleece neglects,
And France Saint Michaels Collar disrespects;
And Spaine and Maltaboth, esteeme but small
Their crossed robes: thy order dimmes them all.

(9) And now at last we come unto the officers pertaining to this noble order, which now are five: but were originally two onely, the Prelate and the Register, both instituted by the Founder. The Prelate of it, alwaies is the Bishop of Winchester for the time being; reputed in those times, Earle of South-hampton also; as the ordinance informs me. His office is, to celebrate divine Service, at all publike actions of the order, which require that dutie, and to receiue the votes of all the Knights, when the elections are, and calculate the suffrages: which last, of late hath beene discharged most commonly by the Chancellour: William de Ednston, Bishop of Winton, at the time of the foundation, was the first Prelate of the Garter. The Register, Scribe, or Notarie, was antiently any of the Canons, whom the King appointed; (the Deane or Custos being present at the Chapters by his place) and so continued till Owen Oglethorpe (afterwards Bishop of Carlisle) being Register and Canon, was made Deane, Anno 1553. who carried it along with him to that office. Since it hath beene appropriated in a manner to the Deanes, to whom there is to be allowed a Pension of 50. pound per annum, paid to him him till the King provide him of some other meanes, of the same value or above. To these two officers, Henry the fifth added a King of Armes, which he called Garter, principall King of Armes in England: Sir William Bridges, Knight, being the first that bore that title. His office is to tend upon the order at their publike meetings and solemnities, and to do service at their funerals when they are deceased: for the discharge whereof, he hath a fee of 40. pound per annum, paid him by the King, certaine allowance yeerely from the Knights themselves; besides his perquisites, Which certaine fees, antiently rated in the statutes, were by an order of King James, in the fifteenth of his raigne, thus settled, viz. that every King which shall be of the order, is to pay 10. pound yeerly, every Prince 8. pound, [Dukes of the royall bloud, 6. pound, other Dukes, 4. pound; a Marquesse, 3. pound, 6. shillings, 8. pence, an Earle, 2. pound, 13. shillings, 4. pence, a Vicount, 2 pound, 6. shillings, 8. pence, a Baron, 2. pound, and a Knight Bachelour, foure nobles. The Chancellour was first instituted by King Edward, of that name the fourth, Anno 1477. the first that had this office, being Richard Benchamp, Bishop of Salisbury, made by King Edward, Deane of Windsore, after hee had bene 27. yeeres Bishop of Salisbury. His successors in that See, (which in whose Diocesse, Windsore is, though exempted from it) enjoyed it for long time together: and as some thinke, till Edward the sixth bestowed it on Sir William Cecil his chiefe Secretary: nor hath it since, bene in the hands of any of the Bishops of that Church, though Bishop Cotton much endeavoured to regaine it. To him, the Chancellour, the common seale belonging to the order is committed, for the dispatch of mandates, missives, and commissions which concerne the order: it being enacted in the twentieth of King James his raigne, whatsoever doth concerne the order, shall passe their owne seale onely, and no other. Hee hath an annuall pension of 100. pound allotted to him, and by decree of Chapter, Anno the fifth of our dread Sovereigne now being, it was awarded him to take place above all Knights, not of his Majesties privie Counsaile, and before used to be 4 backe

p. 200

fore the Chancellour of the Exchequer, in case they were of equall ranke, and the same degree. And last of all, Henry the eighth, added an Vsher, called Black-rod, to attend upon them in the fourteenth of his raigne, 1523. qui pro dignitate & honore ordinis, omniumq; officiorum ipsius regni summus erit, saith the institution, who for the credit of the order, shall be reputed as the principall Vsher of the kingdome. His fee is 30. pound per annum, besides vailes and casualties.

(10) These officers, to reward them for their attendance, besides their fees, which all of them are allowed save the Prelate onely, have also good respect, and faire regard had of them, in their severall services. The Prelate is to have his lodgings and his diet, wheresoever the Court shall be in times of businesse and solemnitie, at the Kings charge; such as Earles use to have in those publique Festivals: and hath a speciall robe of honour, such as the Fellowes of the order use to weare, appointed him for Parliaments and solemne meetings; it being also granted him, in token of his office about his armes to beare the Garter, as doe the Fellowes of the order, as also on his fore-finger, or his thumb, wherewith in a Garter, his Coate of Armes is impaled with the Armes of the See of Winton. The Chancellour is allowed also the like habit, and the same diet: and by an order of Queenie Maries, to weare about his necke, at a Chain or Ribband, a Jewell with a Rose gneules, within the Garter. So for the other officers, as I am given to understand by my courteous friend Sir William Segar, now Garter, or chiefe King of Armes, the Register, Garter, and the Vsher, weare robes of crimson Sattin, with escoucheons of Saint George, without Garters, on the left shoulder. As also that the Garter, King of Armes of the order, useth to weare within a Garter, the Kings Armes crowned. Moreover, that the Garter, I meane the King of Armes so called, doth beare before the Sovereigne, a white Rodde or Virge, with the Armes of Saint George on the toppe thereof, enamelled and impaled with the Sovereignes Armes; and that the Vsher called the Black-rod, beareth a Virge of blacke colour: of which the one doth signifie Premium, and the other Pœna. For when that any new-made Knight is presented to the Sovereaigne, Garter doth bring him in with the white rodde: and if at any time a Fellow of the order forfeiteth his place, he is arrested by the Black-rod. So farre Sir William Segar hath by his speciall fauour, beene pleased to let me know, what honourarie respects belong unto the officers of this nooble order. Adde hereunto, that for a greater grace unto them all, Henry the eighth enacted, that within the Quire at Windsore, in all great and publike meetings, two seates should be provided, both of them to bee placed along before the Sovereaignes stall: the one of them for the Prelate and the Chancellour, the other for the Register, the Garter, and the Black-rod. But it is now time, that I present you with a Catalogue of the Knights and Fellowes of this most excellent order, according as I haue perfected the same, out of the common Registers, by the assistance of my good friend, Doctor Mathew Wren, now Deane of Windsore: to whose humanity I am exceedingly obliged, and willingly acknowledge, that from him I haue received much helpe, in perfecting this latter part of my discourse, that concernes the Order. Which, with the antient Tables of succession, and a list or Catalogue of the principall officers which haue beene belonging to the order: I purpose to deferre till the next Chapter.

Vsher

Aa

CHAP.

CHAP. IV.

(1) The History of the Order reduced to certaine tables.
 (2) The ancient manner of succession in the stalls at Windsor, exemplified out of two old French Tables in the Quire there. (3) A Catalogue of all Saint Georges Knights, from the first institution of the Order unto this present. (4) As also of the Prelats of the Garter. (5) And Chancellours thereof. (6) Together with a list of the Deanes of Windsor. (7) The Registers of the Order. (8) And principall Kings of Armes, called Garter. (9) The state of the said most noble Order, as now it standeth. (10) A recollection, and conclusion of the whole.

(1)

Hus having shewne you what opinion and esteeme, Saint George hath alwaies had in England, both in the Saxon times, and in the Norman; and thence descended to the institution of the most noble Order of the Garter, entituled to him, the maner of election and ceremonies at the installations of his Knights, together with such other things as concerne the lustre of the Order: it now remaines that I present you with a Catalogue of such Peeres and Princes, as have beene made Companions of it; as also with a list of such principall officers, as belong unto it. The whole which is to follow, wee purpose to comprise in foure severall Tables. Wherof the first containes the ancient manner of succession in the stalls at Windsor, exemplified out of two old Tables in the Quire there. The second shall containe the names and titles of such persons, as have beene chosen of the Order, from the first institution thereof, unto the present: and the time also of their Elections. The third, a Catalogue of such principall Officers, Prelats, Chancellours, Registers, and Kings of Armes, which have done service to the Order: To which wee also shall adjoyne a List of the Deanes of Windfore: as being by their place, especially interess'd in the Order, and for long having beene the Registers thereof. Last of all, we shall present you with the State of the said most Noble Order, as now it stands: and so conclude with a brieve summary, and repetition of the whole. First then wee will begin, with the antient tables of succession, kept in the quire of Windfore; on each side one: wherein are comprehended the names of all the founders, and such as did succeed in their severall stalls, till the beginning of the reigne of King Henry the seventh. And this I shall the rather doe, partly that such an antient Monument, almost eaten out with time, may be preserved; if at the least any long life be destinate to this discourse: but principally for a prooffe and evidence, how those of this most excellent Order, did formerly succeed each other. For howsoever now it bee, that he that is elected last, sits in the lowest stall; and after, as the places voyde, is promoted higher: and that it is permitted unto Kings, and Soveraigne Princes, and their children, to take precedency, not according to their continuance of the Order, but their dignities; yet at the first it was not so. The founders purpose was, they should all be fellows: and therefore if a crowned King, came in the room of a Knight Bachelour, he succeeded also in his stall, as did Knights Bachelours in the stalls of such Kings and Princes, whom they succeeded. Concerning which, we spake before, in our last Chapter and 3. Section: and for a prooffe thereof, referred the readers to this following Table, written in French, and so accordingly word for word exhibited. Only I have beene bold to adde sometimes a note or too, as by way of explication.

as

(2)

Ce sont les noms des Primiers fondeurs du Gartier, & des autres qui sont venus en leurs lieux.

1. Le tres noble Roy Edward tiers, & premier fondeur.

Apres lui vint le Roy Richard, fils de Edward Prince de Galles. Apres lui vint le tres noble Roy Henry, fils de Iean Duc de Lancastre. Apres lui vint le noble Prince & puissant, le Roy Henry quins, Heritier & Regent de France, & Conquereur de Normandie. Apres lui vint son fils Henry de Windfore, le V^I, couronné a Paris, Roy de France. (It seemes these Toules being made in the time of King Edward the fourth, durst not give Henry the sixth, the name of King of England.) Apres lui & en son temps, entra en son droit titre, le tres noble Roy Edward quart, la fleur de Chevalerie. Then followes in a latter hand. Apres lui vint le Roy Richard le 3. Apres lui vint le tres noble Roy Henry VII.

2. Prince Edward, & premier fondeur.

Apres lui vint son fils Richard Prince de Galles. Apres lui vint Iean de Lancastre, par l'ordonnance du Souveraigne & la Compaignie. Apres lui vint Monsieur Philip la Vache, qui apres fut remis a le stall du Comte Comte Darby, par la Souveraigne & la compaignie. Apres lui vint le Prince Henry, fils du Roy Henry. Apres lui vint Monsieur Iehan Dabridgecourt. Apres lui vint Sigismond Empereur. Apres lui vint le Prince Edward, fils du Roy Edward le quart: Apres lui vint le premier fils du tres noble Roy Henry le VII. (hee meanes Prince Arthur.)

3. Duc de Lanoastre Henry, & premier fondeur.

Apres lui vint le Seigneur Despenfer, Edward. Apres lui vint le Conte de Stafford, Hugh. Apres lui vint Monsieur Nichol Sarnesfeild. Apres lui vint Monsieur William Arundell. Apres lui vint le Roy de Portugall, Iehan. Apres lui vint le Roy de Portugall, Edward. Apres lui vint le Duc de Gloucestre, Humfrey: Apres lui vint le Roy de Portugall, Alphons. Apres lui vint son fils, le Roy de Portugall, (this was Iohn the 2.)

4. Conte de Warwyke Thomas, & premier fondeur.

Apres lui vint le Conte de Pembroke, Iehan. Apres lui vint le Duc de Bretagne, Iohan: Apres lui vint le Duc de Holland. (He was not D. of Holland, but E. of Holland, and D. of Bavaria, & that in title only, according to the German fashion.) Apres lui vint Monsieur Robessart. Apres lui vint George Duc de Clarence, frere puisné du Roy Edward quart. Apres lui vint le Duc de Bedford, Iasper. This Iasper was elected into the order by King Henry the 6. by the name of Earle-of Pembroke : but as it seemes, being put out by King Edward the 4. he was restored againe by King Henry the seventh, by whom hee was created Duke of Bedford, and sciled in the Stall of the Duke of Clarence. Après lui le Roy de Grande Cecile (he meanes of Naples) Alphons. But he was Duke of Calabria only, when he was elected.

5. Capdan de Buche Pierre, & premier fondeur.

Après lui vint le Conte de Derby, Henry, qui après fut Roy d'Angleterre, Henry le quart. Après lui vint Messire Philip la Vache. Après lui vint Monsieur Gilbert, Sire de Talbot. Après lui vint Messire Iehan Grey. Après lui vint le Conte Marshall Iehan. Après lui vint le Duc de York Richard. Après lui vint le Conte de Warwick Richard. Après lui vint le noble Prince Charlois Duc de Borgoine. Après lui vint le Roy Dom Ferrando, de la Grande Cecile, & de Naples, par l'ordonnance du Souveraigne & la Compaignie.

6. Conte de Stafford, Rauf, & premier fondeur.

Après lui vint Monsf. Allan Bukeshall. Après lui vint Monsf. Briane de Stapilton. Après lui vint Monsf. William Scroup. Après lui vint le Conte de Westmerland, Rauf. Après lui vint Monsf. Iehan de Fastolf. Après lui vint le Roy Dom Ferrando de la Grand Cecile, & de Naples, qui après fut remué a le stall du noble Prince Charlois Duc de Bourgongne. Après lui vint le Duc de Ferrare, Hercules.

7. Conte

7. Conte de Salisbury William, & premier fondeur.

Après lui vint le Conte de Arundell, Thomas. Après lui vint le Conte de Huntingdon, qui après fut fait Duc d'Exestre. Après lui vint le Duc de Norfolk, Iehan. Après lui vint le Conte de Worcestre, Iehan, Grand Constable. Après lui vint le Duc de Norfolk, Iehan. Après lui vint le Marquis Dorset, Thomas, fils de la Royne Elizabeth.

8. Conte de Marche, Roger, & premier fondeur.

Après lui vint Mons. Thomas Vfford. Après lui vint Mons. Richard Pembrugge. Après lui vint le Conte du Suffolk, William. Après lui vint Mons. Richard de Burlé. Après lui Mons. Edward, fils du Duc de York. Après lui vint le Conte de Oxenford, Richard. Après lui vint Mons. Iehan Blount. Après lui vint Mons. William Phelippe, Sire de Bardolph. Après lui vint Messire Iehan Beauchamp. Après lui vint le Duc de York, Richard, fils du Roy Edward le quart. Après lui le Duc de Bokingham.

9. Mons. Iehan de Lisle, & premier fondeur.

Après lui vint Messire Richard la Vache. Après lui vint Messire Edward, Sire de Powys. Après lui vint Her Tangke Clux. Après lui vint Monsieur le Duc de Glocestre, frere du Roy Edward quart. Après lui le Conte de Oxenford, Iehan.

10. Monf. Bartholmew Bourgherft, & premier fondeur.

Après lui vint le Sire de Neufuille, Iehan, (Newill we call him in our moderne English.) Après lui vint Monsieur Pierre Courtenay. Après lui vint le Sire Lovell, Iehan. Après lui vint le Sire Fitz-Hugh, Henry. Après lui vint le sire de Scalles, Thomas. Après lui vint Monf. de Hasting, William. Après lui vint le Conte de Derby, de Sire Stanly, Thomas.

11. Monf. Iehan Beaucham, & premier fondeur:

Après lui vint le Duc de Clarence, Leonnel. Après lui vint le Sire de Basset, Raut: Après lui vint le Duc de Gheldren, William. Après lui vint le Conte de Stafford, ^{donc} Après lui vint le Conte de Kent, Edmund. Après lui Monf. Robert Dumfraville. Après lui vint le Conte de Salisbury, Richard: Après lui vint Monsieur de Montague, Iehan, après Conte de Northumberland. Après lui vint le Conte de Arundell, William.

Vm. vint.

12. Monf. de Mohun, & premier fondeur.

Après lui vint le Conte de Kent, Thomas. Après lui vint le Conte de Dorset, Thomas Duc d'Exestre. Après lui vint Don Petro, fils du Roy de Portugall, Duc de Quimbre. Après lui vint Iehan Bourslier, Sire de Berners. Après lui vint le Duc de Buckingham, Henry. Après lui le Sire de Strange, George.

13. Monf.

13 Mons. Hugh Courtenay, et premier fondeur.

Après lui vint le Conte de Northampton, William. Après lui le duc de Eborum, (he meaneth Yorke) Conte de Camtebrigie, Edmund. Après lui vint Mons. Iehan, fils du Roy Hen. IV. duc de Bethford, Regent de France. Après lui vint Mons. Iehan Grey de Rethin. Après lui vint le Conte de Somersfet, Iehan, après Duc de Somersfet. Après lui vint Dom Alver Dalmadaa, Conte d'Averence, Capitaine de Portugall. Après lui vint le Visconte Bourlier, Henry, après Conte dessex. Après lui Conte de Arundell, Thomas.

14 Mons. Thomas Holland, et premier fondeur.

Après lui vint le duc de Lancastre Iehan, qui après fut remué a le stall du prince Richard, par la Sovereaigne et la compaignie : et en son lieu vint messire Iehan de Burlè. Après lui vint Mons. Thomas Moubray Conte de Northingham. Après lui vint Thomas de Lancastre, fils du Roy Henry quart. This Thomas here mentioned, was Duke of Clarence. Après lui vint le Conte de Suffolke, William de la Po. après Marquis et Duc de Suffolke. Après lui vint son fils, Iehan Duc de Suffolke. Après lui le Sire de Dynham Iehan.

15 Mons. Iehan Grey, et premier fondeur.

Après lui vint Mons. Wautier Manny. Après lui vint Mons. Guichard d'Anguillem. Après lui vint le Duc de Gloucestre, Conte de Bukyngham, Thomas.

Après

Après lui vint le Conte Palatin, Duc de Bavayre, Robert. Après lui vint le Roy Danmarch. Après lui vint Mefire Anthonic de Wideville, Sire de Scales, et de Neuvelles, frere de la Royne Elizabeth. Après lui Mefire Ichau Conyers, Baneret. Après lui le Conte de Surrey, Thomas.

16 Mons. Richard Fitz-Simond, et premier fondeur.

Après lui vint le Conte de Suffolke, Robert. Après lui vint Mefire Robert Namurs. Après lui vint Mons. Ichau Bourgscher. Après lui vint Mons. Thomas Ramston. Après lui vint Mons. Sire Bournell. Après lui vint Mons. Lowes Robeffart, Sire de Bourscher. Après lui vint le Conte Ichau d'Arundell. Après lui vint le Conte Morteigne, Edmund, qui après fuit Marquis de Dorset, et Duc de Somerset. Après lui vint Monsieur de Herbert, William. Après lui vint Ichau de Bukyngham Conte de Wiltthyre. Après lui vint le Conte de Northumberland, Henry. Après lui le Viscount Lovell Frauncoys. Après lui Mefire Edward Wideville. Après lui le Viscount Wellys, Ichau.

17 Mons. Miles Stapilton, et premier fondeur.

Après lui vint le Conte de Herford Humfray. Après lui vint le Conte de Warwyke, le fils, Thomas. Après lui vint Mons. Thomas Erpingham. Après lui vint le Conte de Stafford, Humfrey, apres duc de Bukyngham. Après lui vint Mons. de Scroup, Ichau.

18 Mons.

18 Mons. Thomas Wale, et premier fondeur.

Après lui vint Mons. Reynold de Cobham. Après lui vint Mons. Iohn Sully. Après lui vint le Conte de Warwyk Richard. Après lui vint le Sire de Fauconberge, après Conte de Kent. Après lui vint le Conte de Douglas. Après lui vint le Sire de Broke, Robert.

19 Mons. Hugh de Wrotesley, et premier fondeur.

Après lui vint Messire Thomas de Felton. Après vint le Sire de Wilby, William. Après lui vint Mons. William Haryngton. Après lui vint Messire Rauf Bottiller Seigneur de Sudley. Après lui vint Messire Thomas Seigneur Mautravers.

20 Mons. Neil Loringe, et premier fondeur.

Après lui vint le Conte d'Arundell, Richard. Après lui vint le Sire de Grey. Après lui vint Mons. Hugh Stafford, Sire de Bourscher. Après lui vint le Sire de Hungerford, Wanton. Après lui vint le Sire de Ruvers, Richard, après Conte de Ruvers, et pere de Roigne Elizabeth. Après lui vint Messire Ichon le Seigneur Haward. Après lui Messire Thomas de Borough. Après lui Messire Charles Somerset, Baneret.

21 Mons. Ichon Chandos, et premier fondeur.

Après lui vint Mons. Guy de Briene. Après lui vint le Conte de Ofternant, William, qui après fut remué

al

al autre part, a le stall du duc de Bretaigne, Iehan. This William, Count of Osterreich, who was removed unto the stall of the D. of Bretagne, came after to be E. of Holland, and is there so called. See stall the fourth: Après lui vint Monsf. Humfray fils du Roy Henry. duc de Gloucestre, qui apres fut remué a le stall du Roy de Portugall, Edward Iehan. Après lui vint Captau de la Bouche, Conte de Longueville. Après lui vint Messire Iehan, Sire de Dudley. Après lui Sire William Stanley. Après lui le Conte de Northumberland, Henry. Après lui le Conte de Shrewsbury, George.

22 Monsf. Iames d'Audelè, et premier fondeur.

Après lui vint Monsf. Thomas Granston. Après lui vint Monseur de Roos. Après lui vint le Sire Camus, Thomas. Après lui vint Monsf. Iehan Sire de Clyfford. Après lui vint le Sire de Talbot Iehan, apres Conte de Sherosberie. Après lui vint son fils, Iehan Conte de Sherouesbery. Après lui vint le Sire de Wenlok. Après lui vint Messire William Parre. Après lui Mess. Richard Dunstall. Après lui Messire Edward Ponyns.

23 Monsf. Otes Holand, et premier fondeur.

Après lui vint Frank van Halle, Après lui vint Mess. William Beauchamp. Après lui vint le Seigneur de Morley, Thomas. Après lui vint le seur de Wilby, Robert. Après lui vint Messire Walter Blount, Seur de Montioye. Après lui vint le Contè de Vr. bine.

24 Monsf.

24 Monsf. Henry Em, et premier fondeur.

Après lui vint Monsf. Thomas Vlghtrede. Après lui vint le Conte de Bethford. This E. of Bedford was Ingelram de Coucy, Earle of Suefons in France, who married one of King Edward the thirds daughters. Après lui vint Monsf. Lowes Clyfford. Après lui vint Monsf. Iehan Stanley. Après lui vint le Conte de Sarefbery, Thomas. Après lui vint Monsf. Iehan de Radclif. Après lui vint le Visconte de Beaumont, Iehan. Après lui vint Monsf. Robert Harecourt. Après lui vint Monsf. Walter Deveros, Seieur de Ferres. Après lui vint Messire Iehan Cheny, Baneres.

25 Monsf. Sanfet Daprichecourt, et premier fondeur.

Après lui vint Monsf. William Fitz-Waren. Après lui vint le Sire Latimer, William. Après lui vint Monsf. Simond de Burlè. Après lui vint Monsf. Iehan Deveros. Après lui vint Monsf. de Beaumont, Iehan. Après lui vint le Conte de Somerset, Iehan, Après lui vint Monsf. Iehan de Cornvaille. Après lui vint Monsf. Thomas Hoo. Après lui vint le Seieur de Stanley, Thomas. Après lui vint Messire Iehan Asteley.

26 Monsf. Wauter Pavely, et premier fondeur.

Après lui vint Monsf. Thomas Banastre. Après lui vint Monsf. Sandich de Trane. Après lui vint Monsf. Simon Felbrigge. Après lui vint Henry fils du Roy de Portugall duc de Vison. Après lui vint le Seieur de Duras

Duras. Après lui vint Messire Thomas Montgomery.
Après lui vint Messire Gilbert Talbot, Baneret.

(3) Hitherto of the old French Tables of succession : which both for the antiquity and authority thereof, I have thought opera pretium, to make publike. In the next place, we are to look upon the Fellowes of this heroicke Order, exhibited in a continued Catalogue, from the first institution, untill this present. Whereof I first must give this notice, that there are many mentioned in it which are not extant in the old French Tables, before produced : though specified in the publike Registers of the Order, and the time of their elections, expressed particularly. Whether that the Collector of those Tables was not so carefull as he ought : or that those Knights by him omitted, deceased before their installation, as it is plaine some did, I am not able to determine. But for the Catalogue, which I have perfected, as far as possibly my utmost industrie could extend; it is as followeth.

The

The Founders as they use to call them, of the most noble Order of S. George, named the Garter.

Edward III.
Anno Ch. 1350.

- 1 Edward the third, King of England.
- 2 Edward, Prince of Wales.
- 3 Henry, Duke of Lancaster.
- 4 Thomas Beauchamp, Earle of Warwick.
- 5 Peter Capitaine de la Bouche, a Gascoigner.
- 6 Raph Lord Stafford, after, E. of Stafford.
- 7 William de Montacute, E. of Salisbury.
- 8 Roger Lord Mortimer, after E. of March
- 9 John Lisle, Knight.
- 10 Bartholmew the Burgherst, Knight.
- 11 Iohn Beauchamp, Knight.
- 12 Iohn Lord Mohun of Dunster.
- 13 Hugh de Courtenay, Knight.
- 14 Thomas de Holland, Knight.
- 15 Iohn Grey of Codnor, Knight.
- 16 Richard Fitz-Simon, or Simondson, Knight.
- 17 Miles de Stapulton, Knight.
- 18 Thomas de Wale, Knight.
- 19 Hugh Wirtesley, Knight.
- 20 Neele de Loring, Knight.
- 21 Iohn Chandos, Banneret.
- 22 Iames de Audley, Knight.
- 23 Otho de Holand, Knight.
- 24 Henry Esme, Knight.
- 25 Sanchio Dabridgecourt, Knight, a Henalteir!
- 26 Walter Paveley, Knight.

Note

Note here, that notwithstanding most of these Founders have no other stile, then that of Knights: yet Sir John Lisle, Sir Barthol. Burgherit, Sir I. Beaucham, Sir Hugh Courtney, Sir I. Grey, and Sir James Audley, are elsewhere called by the name of Lords. Note also that after, according as the places voided, these following were elected therein into in the time of the said King Edward. But for the times of their elections, as of theirs also which were admitted of the order, under the two next Kings, there is nothing extant, the registers being in that part defective. Therefore we must be faine to ranke them according to their degree and qualitie: and these they were.

Richard of Bourdeaux, Prince of Wales, after King of England, of that name the second.

Lionell, Duke of Clarence.

John of Gaunt, D. of Lancaster, and afterwards of Aquitaine, called unto Parliament by the name of King of Castile, and Leon.

Edmund of Langley, D. of Yorke, and E. of Cambridge.

John, D. of Bretagne, and Earle of Richmond.

Humfrey de Bohun, Earle of Hertford.

William de Bohun, Earle of Northampton.

John Hastings, Earle of Pembroke.

Thomas Beauchamp, the sonne E. of Warwicke.

Richard Fitz-Alan, Earle of Arundell.

Robert Vfford, Earle of Suffolke.

168. Guiscard de Engolisme, after Earle of Huntington.

Ingelram de Goucy, Earle of Bedford, the Kings sonne in law.

William Lord Fitz-Warin.

Edward

Edward Lord Despencer.

Hugh, Earle of Stafford.

William Lord Latimer.

Reynold Lord Cobham of Sterburgh.

John Lord Nevill of Raby, called de Neufeuille, in the old French Tables.

Raph Lord Bassett of Drayton.

Sir Walter Manny, Banneret, a Gent. of Haynalt, one of especial merit and employment in our wars with France. Shew. 477.

Sir Thomas Vfford.

Sir Thomas Felton, the same I take it, whom Hector Boetius calleth by the name of William, of whom, see the second Chapter of this third part, sect. 7. p. 326.

Sir Francis Van Hall.

Sir Alan Boxhull, Constable of the Tower.

Sir Richard Pemburg.

Sir Thomas Vtreight.

Sir Thomas Banister.

Sir Richard la Vache.

Sir Guido Brian, or Brient.

B b

Richard

Richard II.
An. Ch. 1377.

Richard the second, King of England, &c. and Soveraigne of the Garter, elected in his time, these that follow.

Thomas of Woodstocke, Earle of Buckingham, after Duke of Gloucester.

Henry of Lancaster, Earle of Darby, after Duke of Hereford, and finally, King of England, of that name the fourth.

William, Duke of Gelderland, descended by his mother from the Lady Elenor, sister to King Edward the third, and wife of Reynald, first Duke of Guelders.

William of Bavaria, E. of Osternant, son of Albert, E.
of Holland, afterwards Earle of Holland, Heinalt, &c.

Thomas Holland, Earle of Kent, after D. of Surrey.

Thomas Mowbray, Earle of Nottingham, after Duke of Norfolk.

Edward Earle of Rutland, after Duke of Aumerle, and at last, Duke of Yorke, slaine at the battaile of Agin-court.

Michael de la Pole, Earle of Suffolke:

*Of whom I finde not any thing in the old French Tables, but of William, Earle of Suffolke, there is mention in the eighth stall: which I take rather to be the man,
(he was named Vfford, and died about the sixth of King Richards reigne) then this de la Pole which was then newly raised to honour:*

William Lord Scrope, after Earle of Wiltes.

Sir William Beauchamp, after L. Aburgavenny.

John, Lord Beaumont.

William

William Lord Willoughby.

Richard Lord Grey.

Sir Nicholas Sarnsfield.

Sir Philip de la Vache.

Sir Simon Burley, institutor of the King in his minority.

Sir John D'Eureux.

Sir Brian Stapleton.

Sir Richard Burley.

Sir Peter Courtney.

Sir John Burley.

Sir John Bouchier.

Sir Thomas Grandison.

Sir Lewis Clyfford.

Sir Robert de Namurs.

B 6 2

Henry

Hen. 1111.
An. Ch. 1399:

Henry, the fourth of that name, King of England, &c. Sovereigne of the Garter, made choyce of Henry, Prince of Wales, after K. Henry the fifth.

Thomas, Duke of Clarence, and Lord high Steward.

John, Duke of Bedford, and Lord high Constable, after Regent of France.

Humphrey, Duke of Gloucester, Protector of the Realme in the time of King Henry the sixth.

Robert Count Palatine, and Duke of Bavier.

Thomas Beaufort, Earle of Dorset, after Duke of Exeter.

John Beaufort, Earle of Somerset. Both these were sonnes to John of Gaunt, by his last wife, the Lady Katharine Swinfurt.

Thomas Fitz-Alan, Earle of Arundell.

Edmund, Earle of Stafford.

Edmund Holland, Earle of Kent.

Raph Nevill, Earle of Westmerland:

Gilbert Lord Talbot.

Gilbert Lord Roos.

Thomas Lord Morley.

Edward Lord Powys.

John Lord Lovell.

Edward Lord Burnell.

Sir John Cornwall, after Lord Fanhope.

Sir

Sir William Arundell.

Sir Iohn Stanley.

Sir Robert Vmsfreville.

Sir Thomas Rampston.

Sir Thomas Erpingham, afterwards Captaine of the Archers, at the battaile of Agincourt.

Sir Iohn Sulby.

Sir Sanchio of Trane.

B b 3

Henry

Henry V.
Anno 1413.

Henry the fifth, King of England, &c. Sovereign of the Garter, graced the order with 1413 Iohn, King of Portugall.

Henry or Ericus, K. of Danemarke, who married the Lady Philippa, this King Henries sister.

Sir Iohn Dabridgecourt.

1416 Sigismund King of Hungary and Bohemia, and Emperour elect.

Iohn Holland, Earle of Huntingdon, and after the death of Thomas Beaufort, D. of Exeter

Note here that Holinhead maketh Albert, Earle of Holland, (Duke he calls him) to be invested with the Garter, at the same time with Sigismund the Emperour, but certainly there is no such matter concerning any Earle of Holland, either in the Registers of this King, or any other approved Author. Neither was Albert Earle of Holland, at that time living, who died Anno 1404: twelve yeeres before this supposed installation.

Note also, that betwene the yeere 1416. and 1420: were elected these eleven following, viz.

Thomas Montacute, Earle of Salisbury.

Richard Vere, Earle of Oxon.

Richard Beauchamp, Earle of Warwick, after Vice-Regent of France.

Thomas Lord Camoys.

Robert Lord Willoughby.

Henry Lord Fitz-Hugh.

Sir Simon Felbridge.

Sir Iohn Robsart, or Robertlack.

Sig

Sir William Harington,

Sir Iohn Blount.

Sir Thomas Montacute, not named in the old French Tables, but specified in the Register, pag. 83. as a distinct person from the E. of Salisbury above named.

1420 Hugh Stafford, Lord Bourchier.

Sir Iohn Grey of Eyton.

1421 Sir William Philips, after Lord Bardolph, Treasurer of the household, elected at a Chapter held in Normandy.

1422 William de la Pole, then Earle, after Marquesse, and lastly Duke of Suffolke.

Iohn Moubray, Earle Marshall, after D. of Norfolk

Iohn Lord Clyfford.

Sir Lewys Robsart, Lord Chamberlaine, and afterwards Lord Bourchier:

Sir Walter Hungerford, Lord Secward of the Kings house, after Lord Hungerford, Constable of Windsor, and Lord Treasurer:

Sir Heretongs Cleux, a Knight of Germany, called Her Tancke Chux in the Windsor Tables. / adth

Note here, that Philip, Duke of Burgundie, was in the last of this King Henry, elected of the order, but he refused it, by reason of some differences, as before is said, betwixt him and the Duke of Gloucestre.

*Shew. 257. 1 col.
Hghw. 1. 8349.
425*

B b 4

Henry

Henry VI.
AN. 6b, 1422.

Henry the sixth, King of England, &c. and Sovereigne of the Order, assumed into us.

1423. Iohn Lord Talbot, after Earle of Shrewsbury, the first of this family.

1425. Thomas Lord Scales.

1426. Sir Iohn Fastolfe, Governour of Anjou and Maine.

1429. Humfrey, Earle of Stafford, after Duke of Buckingham, Lord high Constable
Sir Iohn Ratclif.

1432. Iohn Fitz-Alan, Earle of Arundell.

1435. Edward K. of Portugall, sonne of that K. Iohn, who was elected of the Order, by K. Henry the fifth.

Richard D. of Yorke, who after claimed the Kingdome, against this K. Henry.

1436. Edm. Beaufort, E. of Moriton, in Normandy, after D. of Somerset.

Sir Iohn Grey, after L. Grey of Ruthin.

1437. Richard Nevill E. of Salisbury.

1438. Albert of Austria King of Hungarie and Bohemia, and Emperour of Germany, never installed.

Betweene the yeeres 1438, and 1444. were chosen into the Order, these five following, viz.

Iohn Beauford, Duke of Somerset, elder brother
of

of Edm. Earle of Moriton above mentioned.

Gaston de Foix, E. of Longueville.

William Nevill, L. Falconbridge, after Earle
of Kent.

John Visc. Beaumont, the first in England that was ever honored with the title of Viscount.

Ralph L. Butler of Sudeley.

1444. Peter D. of Conimbria, 3. sonne of Iohn King of Portugall.

Henry Duke of Visontium, fourth son to the said
Iohn K. of Portugall. A Prince of most eter-nall fame amongst the Portugueze, who partly by his directions, and partly under his conduct became inamoured of the Seas; discovering in his time the Azores, the Isle of Madera, and all the Western coast of Echiopia and Africke.

1445: Iohn de Foix, created also Earle of Kendall;
called commonly Capdall de Bouche; not mentioned in the old French tables.

Sir Iohn Beauchamp, after L. Beauchamp of Powick.

1446. Aluares d'Almada, E. of Averence, a Portugueze.

Thomas L. Hood and Hastings.

1447. Alphonso King of Portugall.

Sir Francis Surrien, an Arragonian; a man of principall employment in the French warres:
not named in the old French tables.

1450. Alphonso K. of Arragon and Naples.

Casimire K. of Poland.

Will. surnamed the Victorious, D. of Brunswick.

Nci.

v. Hastings 626.
637.
654.

Henry VI.
A.D. 1422.

Henry the sixth, King of England, &c. and Sovereign of the Order, assumed into it.

1423. Iohn Lord Talbot, after Earle of Shrewsbury, the first of this family.

1425. Thomas Lord Scales.

1426. Sir Iohn Fastolf, Governour of Anjou and Maine.

1429. Humfrey, Earle of Stafford, after Duke of Buckingham, Lord high Constable.
Sir Iohn Ratclif.

1432. Iohn Fitz-Alan, Earle of Arundell.

1435. Edward K. of Portugall, sonne of that K. Iohn, who was elected of the Order, by K. Henry the fifth.

Richard D. of Yorke, who after claimed the Kingdome, against this K. Henry.

1436. Edm. Beaufort, E. of Moriton, in Normandy, after D. of Somerset.

Sir Iohn Grey, after L. Grey of Ruthin.

1437. Richard Nevill E. of Salisbury.

1438. Albert of Austria King of Hungarie and Bohemia, and Emperour of Germany, never installed.

Betweene the yeeres 1438, and 1444. were chosen into the Order, these five following, viz.

Iohn Beauford, Duke of Somerset, elder brother of

of Edm. Earle of Moriton above mentioned.

Gaston de Foix, E. of Longueville.

William Nevill, L. Falconbridge, after Earle
of Kent.

John Visc. Beaumont, the first in England that was ever honored with the title of Viscount.

Ralph L. Butler of Sudeley.

1444. Peter D. of Conimbria, 3. sonne of Iohn King
of Portugall.

Henry Duke of Viscontium, fourth son to the said
Iohn K. of Portugall. A Prince of most eter-
nall fame amongst the Portugueze, who partly by his directions, and partly under his conduct became inamoured of the Seas; discovering in his time the Azores, the Isle of Madera, and all the Western coast of Ethiopia and Africke.

1445: Iohn de Foix, created also Earle of Kendall;
called commonly Capdall de Bouche; not mentioned in the old French tables.

Sir Iohn Beauchamp, after L. Beauchamp of Powick.

1446. Aluares d'Almada, E. of Averence, a Portu-
gueze.

Thomas L. Hood and Hastings.

1447. Alphonso King of Portugall.

Sir Francis Surrien, an Arragonian; a man of principall employment in the French warres:
not named in the old French tables.

1450. Alphonso K. of Arragon and Naples.

Casimire K. of Poland.

Will. surnamed the Victorious, D. of Brunswick.

Nci.

v. Hollingh. p. 626.
637.
654.

Neither of these 3. named in the old French tables.

John Mowbray D. of Norfolke.

Rich. Widdevill L. Rivers, after E. Rivers and L. high Constable.

1452. Henry Vis^c. Bouchier, after E. of Essex.

Sir Philip Wentworth, not named in the old French tables.

1453. Sir Edward Hall, not named in the old French tables.

1454. Edward the Kings only sonne, Prince of Wales, slaine afterwards at the battaile of Tewksbury.

1457. John Talbot E. of Shrewsbury, elect into his fathers place.

Lionell L. Welles, not named in the old French tables.

Thomas L. Stanley.

1458. John L. Bouchier of Berners.

1459. Friderick Archd. of Austria, and Emp, not named in the old French tables.

Iasper of Hatfeild E. of Pembroke, after Duke of Bedford.

James Butler E. of Wiltes and Ormond.

John L. Dudley.

1461. Richard Nevill Earle of Warwick, called the King-maker, L. Admirall, Warden of the Cinque-ports, and Capt. of Calice.

William Lord Bonvill, and Harrington. Never installed.

Sir John Wenlock, after L. Wenlocke.

Sir Thomas Kyriell. Never installed.

Note

Note that the foure last named, were taken into the Order, at such time as the Duke of Yorke, had in him the sole governance of the King and Kingdome; as being totally devoted to his faction, and stubborn sticklers in his cause: though of the foure, two never lived to enjoy the honour, as being executed by Queene Margaret, after her victory at Sains Albon.

Edward

Edward. IV.
An. Ch. 1461.

Edward the fourth, King of England, &c. and Soveraigne of the Garter, made Knights thereof.

1463. Ferdinand King of Naples.

Francis Sforza Duke of Millaine, not named in the old French tables.

George D. of Clarence:

Richard D. of Gloucester, after King Richard the third.

James E. of Douglas, a Lord of Scotland.

Galiard L. Duras.

John L. Scrope of Bolton.

William L. Hastings, L. Chamberlaine.

Sir Iohn Afley.

Sir William Chamberlaine, not named in the old French tables.

Sir Robert Haricourt.

*Note that the two last yeeres of King Henry the sixth, had beene fatall to the nobility of this Realme, by reason of the civill warres, betwixt Lancaster and Yorke: that there became so many places vacant, as we see here filled.
For in the Battell of Northampton, were slaine Humfrey Duke of Buckingham, Iohn E. of Shrewsbury, & Iohn Visc. Beaumont; the Lord Scalles, being slaine im-mediatly after it: in that of Wakefeild, Richard Duke of York, and Richard Earle of Salisbury: and in the second at Saint Albans, William Lord Bonvill, and S.
Thomas Kyriell: Besides that Iames Earle of Wylts,
and*

and Lionell Lord Wels, being of the Lancastrian party, were before put out: as probably also were King Henry, and his sonne Prince Edward, and the Earle of Pembroke, that so their places might bee given to such fast friends, as the prevailing Prince thought fittest either to reward, or oblige unto him. Now that there were at that time, so many dead, whose places were not filled, as before is said, is evident by the records at Windsor: where it appeares, that in the first yeere of this King, Supremi Deputatus insignia sex demortuorum offerebat, the Soveraignes Deputy performed the obsequies of six of the said Order, which were then deceased.

1464. Iohn Nevill, Lord Montacute, after Earle of Northumberland, and lastly Marquis Montacute.

William Lord Herbert, after Earle of Pembroke.

1468. Anthony Widdevill Lord Scales, after Earle Ryvers, and Lord high Constable.

N.N. Lord of Montaguison, a Gascoiner, as I conjecture, Not named in the old French tables.

Iohn Tiptoft E. of Worcester, and Lord high Constable.

1472. Walt. Blount L. Montioy.

Iohn Stafford E. of Wiltes.

1473: Will. Fitz-Alan E. of Arundell.

Iohn Mowbray D. of Norfolk.

Iohn de la Pole D. of Suffolke.

Iohn L. Howard, after D. of Norfolk.

1474. Henry

1474. Henry Stafford D. of Buckingham, and after
L. high Constable.

Thomas L. Maltravers.

Walt. d'Eureux L. Ferrers of Chartley.

Sir VVilliam Parre.

1475. Frederick D. of Vrbin.

copyd. p. 607

Henry-Algernon Percy E. of Northumberland.

1476. Edward P. of VVales, after K. Edward 5.

Richard D. of Yorke, the K. second sonne.

Thomas Grey Marq. Dorset.

1477. Sir Thomas Montgomery.

1478. Charles D. of Burgundy.

1480. Ferdinand K. of Castile and Arragon; surnamed the Catholique; not named in the old French tables.

Hercules D. of Ferrara.

1483. Iohn K. of Portugall, whom I conceive rather to have beene elected in the reigne of Henry the 7. for he is named there also, as then chosen.

Richard

Richard of Gloucester, King of England, &c. *Richard III.
An. Ch. 1483.*
Sovereign of the Garter, admitted these: viz.

1483. Sir John Conyers, Banneret.

1484. Thomas E. of Surrey, after D. of Norfolk.

Thomas L. Stanley, after E. of Darby.

Francis L. Lovell, after Visc. Lovell.

Sir William Stanley, afterwards L. Chamber-laine to K. Henry the 7.

1485. Sir Richard Ratcliffe, not named in the old French tables.

Sir Richard Tunstall.

Henry

Henry 7. A.Ch.
1486.

Henry the seventh, King of England, &c.
Soveraigne of the Garter, admitted to this Honour.

1487. Iohn Vere E. of Oxon, Capt. of the Archers at Bosworth field.

Thomas L. Burgh.

1489. Iohn King of Portugall, who though hee be named as chosen in the last yeere of King Edward the fourth; yet I conceive, hee was elected at this time, and not before. My reason
I shall shew hereafter.

George Talbot Earle of Shrewsbury, after the death of the Lord Broke; L. Steward.

Iohn Vis. Welles. See p. 426.

Giles Lord Dawbeny, E. of Bridgewater.

Edward L. Widdeville:

George Stanley L. Strange:

1490. Sir Iohn Savage.

Sir Iohn Cheinic:

1494. Alphonso Duke of Calabria, after King of Naples.

Arthur the Kings eldest sonne; Prince of Wales.

Thom: Grey Marq. Dorset.

After

After betweene the yeere 1494. and 1500. these seven following were elected: viz.

Henry Percy E. of Nothumberland.

Henry Bouchier E. of Essex.

Sir Charles Somerset, Banneret, after Lord
Herbert E. of Worcester.

John L. Dynhan, L. Treasurer.

Robert Willoughby L. Brooke L. Steward.

Sir Edward Poynings. a valiant leader. Holley 210. Father to the Sir Gilbert Talbot, Banneret.

the first of his name. 211. and the only child. Holley 210

1500. Sir Richard Pole, Lord Chamberlaine to the Prince.

After betweene the yeere 1500. and 1505. were chosen of the Order, these 9. that follow: viz.

Maximilian Archd. of Austria, after Emperour.

John K. of Danemarke.

Henry the K. second son, D. of Yorke, after K. of England, of the name the 8.

Edward Courtney E. of Devon.

Sir Richard Guilford.

Sir Thomas Lovell.

Edmund de la Pole, E. of Suffolke.

Sir Reginald Bray.

1505. Vbaldo D. of Urbinc:

Edward Stafford Duke of Buckingham; Lord high Constable.

Gerard E. of Kildare:

Henry L. Stafford, E. of Wilts.

Gc

1506. Ri-

*polo. p. 607
Cousin to the Duke of York. Holley.
798. 2. 607*

1506. Richard Grey E. of Kent.

Sir Rheseap Thomas.

1508. Philip of Austria, King of Castile, and Duke of Burgundie.

Sir Thomas Brandon. M^r of the High Hall.

Henry

Henry the eighth, King of England, &c. and Sovereigne of the order of the Garter, chose into it.

Henry VIII.
 An. Ch. 1509.

1509 Thomas Lord Darcy of the North.
 Edward Sutton, Lord Dudley.

1510 Emanuel, King of Portugall.

Thomas Howard, Earle of Surrey, after Duke of Norfolk.

Thomas West, Lord de la Ware.

Sir Henry Marney, after Lord Marney.

Note here, that this Emanuel is the seventh of the Royall line of Portugall, which had beene chosen of the order within lesse then an hundred yeeres: viz. from the first of King Henry the fifth, untill the second of this King Henry. The reason was, because they were extracted from the house of Lancaster. Philippa, the daughter of Iohn of Gaunt, and sister to King Henry the fourth, being married to that Iohn, King of Portugall, who was elected of the order by King Henry the fifth, from whom the residue did descend. Which overrules me to beleieve, that Iohn the second, King of Portugall, was not chosen by King Edward the fourth, neither is it likely that he would accept that honour of him, that was so great an enemy unto his house. Or else perhaps it may be, that in favour to the Duke of Burgundie, the Kings brother in law, whose mother the Lady Isabella, was daughter to Iohn, the first King of Portugall: this second Iohn might be elected of the order by King Edward the fourth; though he accepted not thereof, for the reason

C C 2

reason above shewed, untill hee was againe elected by King Henry the seventh.

1513 Sir Charles Brandon, after Duke of Suffolke, and Lord great Master.

Edward Howard, L. Admirall, never installed.

George Nevill, Lord Abergavennie.

1514 Julian de Medices, brother to Pope Leo the tenth Edward Stanley, Lord Monteagle, second sonne to the Earle of Darby.

1518 Thomas Lord Dacres of Gillelland:

Sir William Sands, Lord Chamberlaine, after Lord Sandes of the Vine.

1519 Henry Courtney, Earle of Devon, after Marquesse of Exeter.

1522 Charles the fifth, Emperour of Germany, and King of Spaine.

Ferdinand, Arch-Duke of Austria, and King of the Romans.

Sir Richard Wingfield. 1522

1523 Sir Thomas Bollen, Treasurer of the household, after Earle of Wilts, Father of the Lady Anne Bolen, second wife to King Henry the eighth, and mother to Queene Elizabeth.

Walter Deureux L. Ferrers, after Visc. Hereford.

1524 Rob. Ratcliffe, Visc. Fitz-Walter, after Earle of Suffex.

Arthur Plantagenet, Visc. Lisle, base sonne to King Edward the fourth.

1525 Henry Fitz Roy, base sonne to King Henry the eighth, Duke of Richmond and Somerset, Earle of Nottingham, and Lord Admirall.

William Fitz-Alan, Earle of Arundell.

Raph

Raph Nevill, Earle of Westmerland.

Thomas Mannours, Lord Roos, after Earle of Rutland.

V. p. 338

1526 William Fitz-Williams, Lord Admirall, after Earle of Southampton, and Lord Treasurer.

William Blount, Lord Montiey.

Sir Henry Guilford.

1527 Francis, the first, King of France.

John Vere, Earle of Oxon.

Nov. 10. Hollingh. 1898. 268.

1531 Henry Percy, Earle of Northumberland.

1532 Annas, Duke of Montmorencie, great Master of the household to the French King.

Philip de Chabot, Earle of Newblanch, Lord Admirall of France.

} V. Hollingh. p. 929.

Henry Clyfford, Earle of Cumberland.

1536 James the fifth, King of Scotland.

Sir Nicholas Carewe.

1537 Thomas Lord Cromwell, Lord privie seale, after Earle of Essex, and Lord great Chamberlain, and Vicar generall.

1539 John Lord Russell, Lord privie seale, after Earle of Bedford.

Sir Thomas Cheinic. wadd' of 3 part, Trosman of 8

Houfloth. 1546
Hulling. 974

Sir William Kingston.

1540 Thomas Lord Audley, of Walden, L. Chancellor.

Edward Seymor, Earle of Hertford, after Duke of Somerset, and Lord Protector.

Sir Anthony Browne, Father of Anthony Browne, first Viscount Montague.

1541 Henry Howard, Earle of Surrey.

Sir John Gage.

Sir Anthonie Wingfield. Counsellor of state & controller to the Duke

C c 3

1543 John

1543 John Dudley, Visc. Lisle, after Earle of Warwick, and Duke of Northumberland.

William Lord Parre, after Earle of Exce, and Marq. of Northampton.

William Pawlet, Lord Saint-Iohn of Baling, after Earle of Wilts, Marq. of Winchester, and Lord Treasurer.

Sir Iohn Wallop.

1544 Sir Anth. Saint-Leger, Lord Deputy of Ireland.
Henry Fitz-Alan, Earle of Arundell.

1545 Francis Talbot, Earle of Shrewsbury.

Thomas Lord Wriothesley, after Earle of Southampton, and Lord Chancellor.

Edward

Edward the sixth, King of England, &c. and Sovereigne of the Garter, ascribed into the order,

Edward VI.
An. 6. 1547.

1547 Thomas Lord Seymor of Sudley, Lord Ad-mirall, the Protector's brother.

1548 Sir William Paget, Controller of the household, after Lord Paget of Beaudefert.

1549 Henry Grey, Marq. Dorset, after D. of Suffolke.

Francis Hastings, Earle of Huntingdon.

Edward Stanley, Earle of Darby.

Thomas West, Lord de la Ware.

George Brooke, Lord Cobham.

Sir William Herbert, after Lord Herbert of Cardiffe, and Earle of Pembroke.

1551 Henry the second, King of France.

Edward Lord Clinton, Lord Admirall.

Thomas Lord Darcy of Chiche, Lord Chamber-laine.

1552 John, Earle of Warwick, eldest sonne to the Duke of Northumberland.

Henry Nevill, Earle of Westmerland.

Sir Andrew Sutton, alias Dudley.

Cc 4

Mary,

May Qy.
AmCh. 1553.

Mary, Queene of England, &c. and So veraigne of the Garter, assumed into the voyd places,

1553 Philip of Austria, King of Naples and Hieru-salem, after sole Monarch of Spaine, the Queens husband.

Henry Ratcliffe, Earle of Suffex.

1554 Emanuel, Duke of Savoy.

William Lord Howard of Effingham.

Anthony Browne, Visc. Montague, then Embas-sador at Rome.

Sir Edward Hastings, Master of the horse, after Lord Hastings of Loughborough.

1556 William Lord Grey of Wilton.

Thomas Ratcliffe, Earle of Suffex.

Sir Robert Rochester.

Elizabeth,

Elizabeth, Queene of England, &c. and So- Elizabeth Qu. veraigne of the Garter, supplied the void An. Ch. 1558.
places with

- 1559 Thomas Howard, Duke of Norfolk. will. for Margaret Neather
 Henry Mannours, Earle of Rutland. up. 1. 2. 3. 4. 5. 6. 7. 8. 9. 10. 11. 12. 13. 14. 15. 16. 17. 18. 19. 20. 21. 22. 23. 24. 25. 26. 27. 28. 29. 30. 31. 32. 33. 34. 35. 36. 37. 38. 39. 40. 41. 42. 43. 44. 45. 46. 47. 48. 49. 50. 51. 52. 53. 54. 55. 56. 57. 58. 59. 60. 61. 62. 63. 64. 65. 66. 67. 68. 69. 70. 71. 72. 73. 74. 75. 76. 77. 78. 79. 80. 81. 82. 83. 84. 85. 86. 87. 88. 89. 90. 91. 92. 93. 94. 95. 96. 97. 98. 99. 100.
 Sir Robert Dudley, Master of the horse, after Earle of Leicester, and Lord Steward.
 1560 Adolph, Duke of Holsatia. Cand. 2. 3. 4. 5. 6. 7. 8. 9. 10. 11. 12. 13. 14. 15. 16. 17. 18. 19. 20. 21. 22. 23. 24. 25. 26. 27. 28. 29. 30. 31. 32. 33. 34. 35. 36. 37. 38. 39. 40. 41. 42. 43. 44. 45. 46. 47. 48. 49. 50. 51. 52. 53. 54. 55. 56. 57. 58. 59. 60. 61. 62. 63. 64. 65. 66. 67. 68. 69. 70. 71. 72. 73. 74. 75. 76. 77. 78. 79. 80. 81. 82. 83. 84. 85. 86. 87. 88. 89. 90. 91. 92. 93. 94. 95. 96. 97. 98. 99. 100.
 1561 George Talbot, Earle of Shrewsbury.
 Henry Cary, Lord Hunsdon.
 1563 Ambrose Dudley, Earle of Warwick.
 Thomas Percy, Earle of Northumberland.
 1564 Charles the ninth, King of France.
 Francis Russell, Earle of Bedford.
 Sir Henry Sidney, Lord President of Wales, and thrice Lord Deputy of Ireland.
 1568 Maximilian the second, Emperour of Germany, and King of Hungarie and Bohemia.
 1570 Francis Hastings, Earle of Huntingdon. Henry William Somerset, Earle of Worcester.
 1572 Francis, Duke of Mont-morency. Ches. May 16. Cand. 2. 3. 4. 5. 6. 7. 8. 9. 10. 11. 12. 13. 14. 15. 16. 17. 18. 19. 20. 21. 22. 23. 24. 25. 26. 27. 28. 29. 30. 31. 32. 33. 34. 35. 36. 37. 38. 39. 40. 41. 42. 43. 44. 45. 46. 47. 48. 49. 50. 51. 52. 53. 54. 55. 56. 57. 58. 59. 60. 61. 62. 63. 64. 65. 66. 67. 68. 69. 70. 71. 72. 73. 74. 75. 76. 77. 78. 79. 80. 81. 82. 83. 84. 85. 86. 87. 88. 89. 90. 91. 92. 93. 94. 95. 96. 97. 98. 99. 100.
 Walter Deureux, Earle of Essex.
 Arthur Lord Grey of Wilton.
 Edmund Bruges, Lord Chandos.
 William Cecill, Lord Burghley, Lord Treasurer.
 1574 Henry Stanley, Earle of Darby.
 Henry Herbert, Earle of Pembroke.
 1575 Henry the third, King of France and Poland.
 Charles Lord Howard of Effingham, Lord Ad- mirall, after Earle of Nottingham.

1578 Ro

1578 Rodolphus the second, Emperour of Germany, and King of Hungarie and Bohemia.
Fredericke, King of Danemarke.

1579 John Casimire, Count Palatine of the Rhene, and Duke of Bavaria. Feb. 6. 4. 1579. ad. 1581.

1584 Edward Mannours, Earle of Rutland.
William Broke, Lord Cobham.

Henry Lord Scrope of Bolton.

1588 Robert Deureux, Earle of Essex.

Thomas Butler, Earle of Ormond.

Sir Christopher Hatton, Lord Chancellour.

1589 Henry Ratcliffe, Earle of Suffex.

Thomas Sackvill, Lord Buckhurst, after Earle of Dorset, and Lord Treasurer.

1590 Henry the fourth, King of France and Navarre:
James the sixth, King of Scotland, after the first Monarch of Great Britaine.

1592 Gilbert Talbot, Earle of Shrewsbury.

George Clyfford, Earle of Cumberland.

1593 Henry Percy, Earle of Northumberland.

Edward Somerset, Earle of Worcester.

Thomas Lord Burgh, after Lord Deputie of Ireland.

Edmund Lord Sheffield, now E. of Moulgrave.

Sir Francis Knollys, Treasurer of the household.

1597 Frederick, Duke of Wirtenberge.

Thomas Lord Howard of Walden, after Earle of Suffolke, and Lord Treasurer.

George Carie, Lord Hunfdon, L. Chamberlaine.

Charles Blount, Lord Montjoy, after Lord Deputie of Ireland, and Earle of Devon.

Sir Henry Lea, keeper of the Armerie.

1599 Ro^s

Canden. 4. 1584. p. 134.

Canden. 4. 1584. p. 134.

1599 Robert Ratcliffe, Earle of Suffex.

Henry Broke, Lord Cobham, Lord Warden of the Cinque-ports.

Thomas Lord Scrope of Bolton.

1601 William Stanley, Earle of Darby.

Thomas Cecill, Lord Burghley, after Earle of Exeter.

James

James the first,
Ann Ch. 1602.

James, King of Great Britaine, &c. and Sovereigne of the Garter, adorned the order with these worthies.

1603 Chriftierne the fourth, King of Danemarke.
Henry, the Kings eldest sonne, Prince of Wales.

Lewis, Duke of Lenox, afterwards Earle, and Duke of Richmond, and Lord Steward.

Henry Wriothesley, Earle of Southampton.

John Ereskin, Earle of Marre.

William Herbert, Earle of Pembroke, Lord Steward after the death of Marq. Hamilton.

1605 Vlrick, Duke of Holsatia.

Henry Howard, Earle of Northampton, Lord privie seale.

1606 Robert Cecil, Earle of Salisbury, afterwards Lord Treasurer.

Thomas Howard, Visc. Bindon.

1608 George Hume, Earle of Dunbarre, Lord Treasurer of Scotland.

Philip Herbert, Earle of Montgomery, afterwards Earle of Pembroke also, and Lord Chamberlaine.

1611 Charles the Kings second sonne, Duke of Yorke, after Prince of Wales, and second Monarch of Great Britaine.

Thomas Howard, Earle of Arundell, after Lord Marshall.

Robert Carre, Visc. Rochester, after Earle of Somerset.

1612 Fre-

1612 Frederick, Prince Elector Palatine, the Kings sonne in law.

Maurice Van Nassaw, Prince of Orange, and Governour of the armies of the States Generall.

1615 Thomas Ereskin, Visc. Fenton, now E. of Kelly.
William Lord Knollys, after Visc. Wallingford, and Earle of Banbury.

1616 Francis Mannours, Earle of Rutland.
Sir George Villiers, Master of the Horse, after Earle, Marq. and Duke of Buckingham.
Robert Sidney, Visc. Lisle, after Earle of Lei- cester.

1623 James Marq. Hamilton, Earle of Cambridge, afterwards Lord Steward.

1624 Esme Steward, Lord D'Aubigny, Duke of Le- nox, and Earle of March.

Christian, Duke of Brunswick.

William Cecill, Earle of Salisbury.

James Hay, Earle of Carlile.

Charles

Charles I. Anno
Chr. 1625.

CHARLES of that name the first;
King of Great Brittain, France, and Ireland, &c. Sovereigne of the most noble Order of Saint George, called the Garter, adorned therewith

1625. EDward Sackvill Earle of Dorset, after Lord
Chamberlaine of the Queenes household.

Henry Rich E. of Holland.

Thomas Howard, E. of Berkshire.

Claude de Lorreine, D. of Chevreuse.

1627. Gustavus Adolphus, K. of Sweden.

Henry Van Nassaw, Prince of Orange, successor to his brother Maurice in his command in the Low-Countries.

Theophilus Howard, Earle of Suffolk, L. Warden of the Cinq-ports.

1628. Will. Compton, E. of Northampton, L. President of Wales.

1630. Richard L. Weston of Neyland, Lord Treasurer.

Robert Bertie, Lord Willoughby E. of Lindsey and L. high Chamberlaine.

William Cecill E. of Exeter.

James Hamilton, Marquese Hamilton Earle of Cambridge, and Master of the Horse: in number the 424. person, that hath beene cho-

chosen of the Order: Whereof besides the Kings, Princes, and persons of most eminency in this Kingdome, there have been six and fifty Kings and Princes of forreine Countries, as by the Catalogue it appeares. viz. 8. Emperours of Germany, 5. Kings of France, 3. Kings of Spain besides Charles the Emperour, 2. Kings of Scotland, 7. Kings and Princes of the Royall house of Portugall, 4. Kings of Danemarke, one of Poland, one of Sweden, 3. of Naples, one Duke of Milaine, one of Ferrara, 2. of Urbine, 3. Counties Palatine, whereof one Electour, 2. Dukes of Brunswick, 2. of Holst, one of Wittenberge, one of Gueldres, one Earle of Holland, one Duke of Savoy, one of Bretagne, 2. Princes of Orange, 2. Dukes of Montmorency, and the Duke of Chevreuse: besides some other forreiners, of speciall merit and desert, though inferiour quality:

The Catalogue of the Saint Georges Knights thus finished, in the next place wee will present you with a list of the principall Officers, which belong unto them. Great persons are not often seene without their chiefe attendants: not is it Sac pro Majestate, that they should. And first wee will begin with those which are first in dignity; which are the Prelates of the Orders, Bishops of Winton for the time being, &c. then accounted as is apparant by the Statutes, Earles of Southampton, which Office whether it was conferred upon them, in honour of William de Edingdon, then Bishop of Winton, and in especiall favour with that King; or in relation to the then potency and grandour of this see (of which this Wil. de Edingdon did use to say, that although Canterbury had the higher racke, yet Winchester had the deeper manger:) I cannot say.

The

The Prelats of the Garter.

1350. William de Edindon, Bishop of Winton, and Lord Treasurer; and afterward (such was his favour with the King) L. Chancellour also.

1365. William de Wickham, Bishop of Winton, and L. Chancellour.

1405. Henry Beaufort, one of the sonnes of Iohn of Gaunt by his third wife Catharine Swinfur, Bishop of Winton, Cardinall of S. Eusebius and L. Chancellour.

1447. William de Wainflete, Bishop of Winton, and L. Chancellour.

1486. Peter Courtney, B. of Winton.

1493. Thomas Langton B. of Winton.

1502. Richard Foxe, Bishop of Winton, and Lord Privy seale.

1530. Thomas Wolsey, Archbishop of Yorke, Cardinall of S. Cecily, Lord Chancellour, and B. of Winton, in Commendam.

1534. Steven Gardiner, B. of Winton. Nov. 1552

1550. Iohn Poyner, B. of Winton. 1624

1553. Steven Gardiner, restored againe to the see of Winton, and made Lord Chancellour.

1556. Iohn VWhite, B. of Winton.

1560. Robert Horne, B. of Winton.

1580. Iohn Watson, B. of Winton.

1584. Thomas Cowper, B. of Winton.

1595.

1595. William Wickham, B. of Winton.

1595. William Day, B. of Winton.

1597. Thomas Bilson, Bishop of Winton, and privie Counsellour. D. July 14. 1616.1616. James Montague, Bishop of Winton and privie Counsellour. D. July 17. 16141618. Lancelot Andrewes, Bishop of Winton and privie Counsellour. D. Oct. 21. 1626.1628. Richard Neyle, Bishop of Winton and privie Counsellour: who on Saint Georges day, Anno1632. discharged the Office of the Prelat, though he was actually translated to the see of York, the see of Winton being then vacant. D. Oct. 31. 1640.

1632. Waller Cuske Bishop of Winton.

1660. Brian Duppa Bishop of Winchester.

1662. George Morley Bp of Winchester.

(5) Next to the Prelate in ranke and dignity, is the Chancellour; the first that bore that office (as before is said) being Richard Beauchamp: who being consecrated Bishop of Hereford, Anno 1448. and two yeeres after that, removed to Salisbury; was in the yeere 1476. made the first Chancellour of the order; and the yeere after, Deane of Windsore. Before which time, some one or other of the Companions of the said order, had in his custody the pu-blicke seale belonging to it: as amongst others Sir Iohn Robert is remembred in the reigne of King Henry the 5. by the stile or title of Custos sigilli ordinis. But in the 18. of this K. it was thus enacted: Quod licet ex antiquis statutis Sigillum Ordinis custodiendum sit a committione aliquo apud Supremum presens, tamen ob certas modo causas R. Pater Sarubrensis E-piscopus illud ipsum quamdiu Regi placuerit, custodiret, Cancellarium Ordinis ob id appellandum. Which Chancellour and his successours take in order thus.

D d

Chan-

Chancellours of the Order.

Oct. 10. 15 Dec. 4.
 Act. 4. p. 200.

William Cant. 288.

1477. Richard Beauchamp Bishop of Salisbury, and Deane of Windsor; brother of Walt. Beau- champ Baron of Saint Amand: which Barony by what means it came unto this familie of the Beauchamps, see Camden in his description of Berkshire.
1482. Leonell Widdeville Bishop of Salisbury, brother of Queene Elizabeth, the wife of Edward the fourth, and Chancellour of the Univerſity of Oxon.
1485. Thomas Langton Bishop of Sarum and after of Winton.
1493. Iohn Blythe Bishop of Sarum, and Chancellour of the Univerſity of Cambridge.
1500. Henry Deane Bishop of Sarum, translated afterwards to Canterbury.
1502. Edmund Audeley, Bishop of Sarum: who dying in the yeece 1524. Lawrence Campegius, one of the Court of Rome, and Cardinall of Saint Anastasiuſ, was by King Henry the eight made Bishop of Salisbury. But whether he, being almost continually absent, or any one of his successours, after they once had lost possession, were Chancellours also of the Order: nondum constat.

1552. Sir

1552. Sir William Cecill principall Secretary of Estate, named Chancellour of the Order in a Chapter, held this yeere at Westminster, March 17. after Lord Burleigh, and one of the Companions of the said most noble Order.

1553. Sir William Petre, principall Secretarie of Estate.

1573. Sir Thomas Smith, principall Secretarie of Estate.

1578. Sir Francis Walsingham, principall Secretary of Estate.

1588. Sir Amias Paulet, Governour of the Isle of Iarsey, and privie Counsellor.

1589. Sir Iohn Woollee, Secretarie for the Latine tongue. A privie Counsellor.

1596. Sir Edward Dyer.

1608. Sir Iohn Herbert, principall Secretarie of Estate.

1610. Sir George Moore, Receiver Generall to Prince Henry, when he was first created Prince of Wales.

Sir Francis Crane, now Chancellour. Died 1636.

Sir Thomas Roe was Chancellour. Died 1643.

Sir Henry de la Beche, Chancellour. Died 1660.

Sir William Mordaunt, Chancellour. Died 1660.

(6) In the next place I shall present you with a list of the Desires of ~~the Order~~ ^{the Order} partly because of their especial Interest in the said Order: but principally because that ever since Queens I. & II. reignes they have beene Registers thereof. At first they had the Title of Custos, Guardian or Warden, the first that had that Office, being one William Muggs, admitted thereunto Anno 1348 what time

D d 2

time the Colledge was endowed, and the Canons, some of them installed. For the succession of the which, as also of the Registers next after following; I must confesse my selfe indebted to the painefull industry of Master Thomas Frysh, late Canon of Windfore, a man well studied in the state and story of his Colledge.

Wardens and Deanes of Windfore.

1348. William Mugge Custos. 24 Nov. v. Rail. Arund. p. 116
 1380. Walter Almary, Custos.
 1403. Thomas Buthiller, Custos; Archdeacon of Northampton.
 1412. Thomas Kingston, presented to that dignity by the name of Deane, which title hath beene since continued unto his successors.
 1417. Iohn Arundell, Deane. During whose time the Church was anew incorporated, by the name of the Deane and Canons of Windfore, and their possessions confirmed by authority of Parliament.
 1452. Thomas Manning, Deane. I finde in Hollinshed, that this Doctor Manning (for so he calls him) was taken prisoner, in the company of King Henry the 6. his Patron, and advancer, and that being serupon an horse with his legs bound underneath, hee was together with the laid King, brought so to London. But what befell him afterward, I cannot tell.

1462. Iohn

1462. Iohn Faux, Deane:

1470. William Morland, Deane.

1471. Iohn Davison, Deane.

1473. William Dudley, sonne of Iohn Lord Dudley,

Deane of Windfore, after Bishop of Durham.

1476. Peter Courtney, Doctor of the Lawes, after Bishop of Exon, and from thence translated unto VVinton.

1477. Richard Beauchamp, Bishop of Salisbury

Chancellour of the Order, and Deane of Windfore.

1481. Thomas Danet, Doctor of Divinity, Deane of Windfore, and Almoner to K. Edward the 4.

1483. VVilliam Benley:

1484. Iohn Morgan, Doctor of the Lawes, after B. of S. Davids.

1495. Christopher VVilewick, Deane of Windfore and Yorke, Almoner, and privy Counciller to King Henry the seventh: by whom he was employed in many forreine embassies.

1505. Christopher Bambridge, Doctor of the Lawes, Deane of Yorke and Windfore, and Master of the Rolls: after made Bishop of Durham, then of Yorke, and finally Cardinall of S. Praxedes.

1507. Thomas Hobbes, Doctor of the Lawes, Deane of Windfore:

1510. Nicholas VVest, Doctor of the Lawes, and Deane of Windfore: made after Bishop of Ely:

Dd 3

1515. Iohn

1515 John Veisie, alias Harman, Doctor of the lawes, Deane of the Kings Chappell, and of Windfore, after Bishop of Exeter.

1519 Iohn Clerke, Doctor of Divinitie, Master of the Rolles, and Deane of Windfore, after Bishop of Bath and Welles.

1528 Richard Sampson, Doctor of the lawes, Deane of the Chappell of Windfore, & Saint Pauls London: after Bishop of Chichester, and from thence translated unto Lichfield.

1536 William Franklyn, Deane. Followed by M^r quene.

1553 Owen Oglethorpe, Doctor of Divinitie, Deane and Register, afterwards Bishop of Carlile.

1556 Hugh Weston, Doctor of Divinitie, Deane of Westminster, translated unto Windfore, to make roome for Fecknam the new Abbot, and his new Covent of Benedictine Monkes, there re-established by Queene Mary.

1557 Iohn Boxhull, Doctor of Divinitie, one of the principall Secretaries to Queene Mary, Deane and Register.

1559 George Carewe, Deane of Windfore, Bristoll, Oxon, Exeter, and the Chappell Royall, and Register of the Order: father of George, late Earle of Tormes.

1572 William Day, Bachelour of Divinitie, Deane of Windfore, and Provost of Eaton; after Bishop of Winton, did, being Deane, execute the Registers office, but was never sworne and admitted to it.

1595 Robert Bennet, Doctor of Divinitie, Deane and Register, after Bishop of Hereford.

1602 Giles

- 1602 Giles Tomson, Doctor of Divinitie, Deane and Register, after Bishop of Gloucester.
- 1612 Anthony Maxcy, Doctor of Divinitie, Deane and Register.
- 1618 Marc Antonio de Dominis, Archbishop of Spalato, comming upon pretence of conscience and religion into England, was by King James made Deane of Windfore, Register of the Order, and Master of the Savoy.
- 1622 Henry Beaumont, Doctor of Divinitie, after the departure of Spalato, Deane and Register.
- 1628 Mathew Wrenne, Doctor of Divinitie, Master of Peter-House in Cambridge, and one of his Majesties Chaplaines in ordinarie, now Deane and Register. He continued Master of Peter-House till 1641. He continued Master of Peter-House till 1641. V
- 1635 Christopher Dowson D.D. (younger brother of Dr. Matthew Dowson) was made Deane, &c. Register.
1666. Bannet Rintz D.D. 1677.

(7) As for the Register, antiently he was any of the Canons, whom the Sovereigne pleased to nominate unto that office: and it continued amongst them, as it is supposed, till that King Henry the eighth made it a thing indifferent, whether the Register were of Windfore Church or not: as it appeares by his appendix to the Statutes, and the examples in his time, and in his times onely: such of them, of whose being there is any Constar, are these that follow.

1677. John Durell D.D. Dean. 1677. John Durell D.D. Dean. 1677. ~~John Durell D.D. Dean. 1677.~~
1683. Francis Turner D.D. Francis Turner D.D. 1683. ~~Francis Turner D.D. 1683.~~
1684. Gregory Hafford D.D. Gregory Hafford D.D. 1684. ~~Gregory Hafford D.D. 1684.~~

Dd 4

Regi-

Registers of the Order.

1414 Iohn Coringham, Register and Canon, not the first Register by many, but the first extant on record.

1445 John Deepden, Register and Canon.

1460 James Goldwell, Register and Canon, Doctor of the lawes, Deane of Sarum, and Secretarie of Estate, after Bishop of Norwich.

1481 Oliver King, Doctor of the lawes, Register and Canon, Secretarie to Prince Edward, sonne of King Henry the sixth, as also to King Edward the fourth, Edward the fifth, and King Henry the seventh, Anno 1492. Bishop of Exon, and from thence translated to Bath and Welles.

1509 Thomas Ruthall, then Bishop of Durham, did, as I finde, discharge the office of Register, but how long he had done thelike before, that I cannot tell. I finde him not amongst the Canons.

1510 Thomas Wolsey, then the Kings Almoner, after Archbishop of Yorke, Cardinal, &c. Register, but not Canon.

1524 Richard Sychor, Register and Canon: but that he did immediately succeed Wolsey, is not apparent.

1534 Robert Aldridge, Doctor of Divinitie, and Provost of Eaton, Register and Canon, after Bishop of Carlile, Anno 1537.

1540 Owen

* * * *

1550 Owen Ogilthorpe, Canon, and after Register, who being by Queene Mary made Deane of Windsore, Anno 1553. was notwithstanding continued by the Sovereigne in the said office. Which hee did also execute when he was Bishop of Carlisle, during the time that Doctor Weston his successor was Deane of Windsore.

1557 Iohn Boxhull, Deane and Register.

1560 George Carewe Deane, was admitted Register.

1572 William Day, Deane, was Register in fact, but not in title or by office.

1596 Robert Bennet, Deane, was admitted Register.

1602 Giles Tomson, Deane and Register.

1612 Anthony Maxey, Deane and Register.

1618 Marc. Antonio de Dominis, Deane and Register.

1622 Henry Beaumont, Deane and Register.

1628 Matthew Wrenne, Deane and Register now being. 1687 Francis Trenchard 10. Reg.

1635 Christopher Tomson, Dⁿ CL. Registra.

1660 Bunt Rth. 22. 1677 John Dⁿ. 1683

(8) And now wee come unto the principall King of Armes, which in relation to this order, hath the name of Garter. Henry the fifth added this officer to the Order, and superadded him to the two other Kings of Armes, like as the Pater Patratus was, amongst the Feciales in the state of Rome. As principall King of Armes, it belongs unto him, to order the funerall solemnities of the greater Nobilitie throughout the Kingdome; from Barons inclusively, ~~and~~ and upwards: As Garter to attend especially upon the installations, obsequies, and other publike acts of the companions of the Order. By whom this office of the Garter was before executed, I meane before King Henry the fifth appointed this particular officer to that service, I am not able

In vno Heraldo. p. 357.

able to determine. Sir Henry Spelman, in that great treasure of learning, his Glossarium, doth seeme to intimate, that probably Windsore Herald might be designed to that employment by King Edward the third, who made the messenger which brought him tidings of a victory that hee got in Bretagne, one of his Heralds, and gave unto him the name of Windsore, (where it seemes hee was when the newes was brought) Forte (saith he) ut Garterij ordini, cuius Windsore capitulum, inferuires. This happened in the yeere 1366: some sixteene yeeres after the institution of the Order, and not improbably, some such might be the Kings purpose in it: there being no particular Herald designed to this attendance, if he were not, in more then 60. yeeres after the institution. But to proceed to those that had the name of Garter, they have beene men of good esteeme, and honoured every one of them successively, with Knighthood: the names of whom, Sir William Segar, who worthily for almost 30. yeeres hath borne that office, hath pleased out of his abundant curtesie to impart unto me, and are these that follow.

Garters

Garters, or Kings of Armes.

SIR William Bridges first Garter, made by King Henry the fifth, as before is said.

Sir Iohn Smart, Garter, tempore Henrici 6.

1465 Sir Iohn Writh, alias Wriothesley, Garter:

1509 Sir Thomas Wriothesley, Garter, Father of Thomas, first Earle of Southampton of this family, and one of the Fellowes of the Order. with inde p. 426

1535 Sir Thomas Wall, Garter.

1531 Sir Christopher Barker, Knight of the Bathe, Garter.

1557 Sir Gilbert Dethicke, Garter, named in a Chapter held at Westminster, Anno 1552. March 17:

1586 Sir William Dethick, Garter.

1603 Sir William Segar, Garter, principall King of Armes, now being

Sir John Gausson, Garter, principall K. of Armes. 1685. Henry 2d. Sir Edward Waller, Garter, principall K. of Armes. 1685. Henry 2d.

(9) I should descend unto the Vshers, called black-rood as afore is said: but that I have no good record of their succession. Onely I finde, that in the Chapter held at Westminster, so often mentioned: Sir Philip Hobby is remembred as Vsher of the Order. As also, that in the thirty second yeere of Queens Elizabeth, one Master William Norris enjoyed that office, to whom succeeded in her raigne, Anthony Wingfield, and Richard Comisby Esquires, as after them, Anno the eighteenth of King James, Master James Maxwell. Not meddling therefore more in this, as a thing uncertaine, in the last place we are to represent the state of the said most noble Order, as now it stands: and after to conclude with a briefe Summarie and repetition of the whole discourse.

p 351. 393. 310.

The

The Fellowes and Companions of the most noble order of Saint George, commonly called the Garter, as now they stand this present twentieth of Octob. Anno Dom. 1632.

- 1 Charles, King of Great Britaine, elected, Anno 1611.
- 2 Christierne, King of Danemarke, elected, Anno 1603.
- 3 Gustavus Adolphus, King of Sweden, elected, Anno 1627.
- 4 Frederick, Prince Elector Palatine, elected, Anno 1612.
- 5 Henry, Prince of Orange, elected, Anno 1627.
- 6 Claude, D. of Cheureuze, elected, Anno 1625.
- 7 Henry, E. of Northumberland, elected, Anno 1603.
- 8 Edmund, Earle of Moulgrave, elected, Anno 1593.
- 9 William, Earle of Darby, elected, Anno 1601.
- 10 John, Earle of Marre, elected, Anno 1603.
- 11 Philip, Earle of Pembroke and Montgomery, elected, Anno 1608.
- 12 Thomas, Earle of Arundell and Surrey, elected
Anno 1611.
- 13 Robert, Earle of Somerset, elected, Anno 1611.
- 14 Thomas, Earle of Kelly, elected, Anno 1615.
- 15 Francis, Earle of Rutland, elected, Anno 1616.
- 16 William, Earle of Salisbury, elected, Anno 1624.
- 17 James, Earle of Carlile, elected, Anno 1624.
- 18 Edward

- 18 Edward, Earle of Dorset, elected, Anno 1625.
- 19 Henry, Earle of Holland, elected, Anno 1625.
- 20 Thomas, Earle of Berkshire, elected, Anno 1625.
- 21 Theophilus, Earle of Suffolke, elected, Anno 1627.
- 22 Richard, Lord Weston, elected, Anno 1630.
- 23 Robert, Earle of Lindsey, elected, Anno 1630.
- 24 William, Earle of Exeter, elected, Anno 1630.
- 25 James, Marquesse Hamilton, elected, Anno 1630.

Earle of Banburies place voyde.

Officers of the order, Anno 1632.

- 1 Prelate.
- 2 Sir Francis Crane, Chancellour.
- 3 Mathew Wrenne, Deane and Register.
- 4 Sir William Segar, Carter.
- 5 James Maxwell, Black-raddle.

Such

Such are the Founders, and these the officers of the said most noble order at this present. I say the Founders, for by that name they are all entituled, which have beene admitted of the Order: those which were first elected by King Edward the third, at the originall institution thereof, being, as it appears by the old French Tables, called Les premiers fondeurs, the first founders. The reason is, because that whereas there were 13. Canons, and as many Vicars, Petit-Canons, or Canonici minores, intended to bee founded in the Church of Windfore: it was the purpose of King Edward, that every one of those that were first chosen of the order, should contribute to the endowment of the said Church, and in nomine, for that time, have the nomination of a Canon, every founder one; the places afterward to be disposed for ever at the pleasure of the Souveraigne. So my old copie of the Statutes tells me thus. The which Canons shall be presented by the Founders of this order, that is to say, every of the Founders that shall be for the time, shall present his Canon to the Warden of the College. (which was the Kings Canon:) and in case any of the Canons die, neither he that did present him, nor none other shall present none, but the Souveraigne of the said Order for evermore. As for their successors in the said most noble order, it was ordained by statute, that every one which was elected thereunto, should pay at his admission, a certaine summe of money, according unto their estates, toward the maintenance of the Canon and poore Knights, viz. the Souveraigne 40. markes, a stranger King, 20. pound, a Prince, 20. markes, a Duke, 10. pound. an Earle, 10. markes. a Baron Baron or Banneret, 5. pound, and every Bachelor Knight, 5. markes: whereto was after added by an act of Chapter, Anno the twenty third of King Henry the sixth, that Marqueesses being in a middle ranke betweene Dukes & Earles, should pay down 8. pound. 6. shillings, 8. pence, and Viscounts being ranked between Earles & Barons, 5. l. 16. s. 8. d. Nor are their hachments, that is to say, their swords & helmets, to be placed above their stalls, till they have paid the sums aforesaid. And this, as saith the Statute, ut eques unusquisque deveniet in hunc ordinē tanto dignior inveniat, ut qui titulo, nomine ac privilegio fundatoris huius ordinis exornetur: to this intent and purpose, that every one of them which shall enter into the said Order, be the more worthy to have the name, title, and privilege of one of the Founders thereof. And for a final proofe, that not the first alone which were elected of the Order, but that their successors also have the name of Founders, the Statute doth precisely say, that "if a Knight elected, die before he is installed, and hath received the whole habit, minime fundatorum unus denominatur, eo quod plenam statum sui possessionem non obtinuerat: he shall not be reputed as a Founder of the said noble Order, because he had not full possession of his stall. But of Saint Georges Knights enough. It is now time to recapitulate and conclude the whole discourse.

Io. Iamque

(to) langua opus exegi: Thus have I, as I hope, made good that which at first I undertooke: so to assert the Historie of this most blessed Saint and Martyr, that neither we become ashamed of our Saint George, nor he of us. The summe and substance of the whole, (to recollect what hath beene spoken before at large) is briefly this. In the first part, we have removed those imputations which were cast upon this Storie, by the practises of Heretickes, and follies of the Legendaries. We have given also satisfaction to those doubts, and arguments, which in these latter ages have beene made against Saint George; and that so thoroughly, and point per point, as the saying is: that I perswade my selfe, there is not any thing unsatisfied, which may give occasion to reply. If any man too passionately affected to mens names and persons; shall waive the cause in hand, to take upon him the defence of those whole judgements herein are rejected: such I must first enforme, that I respect and reverence those severall Writers, which have thought the contrary, and have those bookes and copies of themselves, which they have left behinde them, in a just esteeme. Onely I must conceive my selfe to be a Free-man, obliged to no mans iudgement, nor sworne to any mans opinion, of what eminent ranke soever; but left at liberty, to search the way of truth, and trace the foot-steps of antiquity, from which I would not gladly twerve. Which protestation first premised, I will be bold to use Saint Hieromes words unto his Reader: Quaeso Lector ut memor tribunalis Domini, &c. nec mihi, nec Adversariis meis serveas, neque personas loquentium, sed causam consideres: The second part of this discourse, contains the formall iustification of Saint Georges Historie, considered in it selfe: so farre forth, as it hath beene commended to us, in the best Authors. In that, we have confirmed it, first by the testimony of many Writers of good quality, which have unanimously concurred in it; and those both of the Greeke Church, and of the Latines, both Protestants and Papists. In the next place, we had recourse unto the practise of the Church Catholike, which hath abundantly expressed her good opinion of him: in giving Advers. Error:

Ioban. Hieroso.

giving him such special place in her publike Martyrologies, and in her ordinary service; in taking such a tender care of his precious Reliques, and consecrating by his name, so many goodly and magnificent Temples. To this, we have adjoynd the publike honours done unto him; by the greatest Princes and Republicks in the Christian world. Not onely in erecting Monasteries to his name and memory; and instituting Orders of Religious persons, to his honour: but, as the times then were, in making him the tutelarie Saint of their men of warre, the special Patron of their estates, and military Orders also; and not so onely, but the Guardian of the distressed affaires of Christianity. In the last part, we have particularly related the testimonies given him by our Eng. Writers, & the honors done unto him here in Eng. as generally, in calling Churches by his name, in making him the Patron of this most noble kingdom, in leaving him his place in our publike Calendars, & forcing the wilde Irish to call upon him in their battailes; so more especially, in dedicating to him that most Heroicke order of Saint George, called commonly the Garter. Such honours, and of such high esteeme, as might have beene of force, to make an English man, suspend his censure of him; and to forbear to second any quarrels raised against him: had not Saint Auslin truly noted this, to be a quality of error, that whatsoever likes not us, we would not gladly should be pleasing unto any others. Hoc est erroris proprium De gener. (saith he) ut quod cuique displicet, id quoque existimet oportere displicere alijs. What euer hath beene done by mee, in the contexture and composition of the whole; I leave to be determined by all learned and religious men, who shall hap to reade it: to whose judicious censure, next vnder his sacred Majestie, and this most excellent Church whereof I am; I willingly submit my selfe, and my performance. For my part, I resolve of it, with the Author of the Macchabees, who though hee be Apocryphall in reference to points of Doctrine, was never questioned yet, for truth of storie: with whose submission of himselfe I conclude

Ec

this

this Treatise: *Ego quoque in his faciam finem sermonis. Et si quidem bene, & ut Historia compoſitis, hoc & ipſo volum: ſu-
 t: autem minus digno, concedendum eſt mihi.* If I have done well, and as is fitting the Storie, it is that which I deſired: but if ſlenderly and meanly, it is that which I could attaine unto, and here ſhall be an end.

FINIS.

Gloria in excelsis Deo.

A

A
R E V I E W
OF
THE WHOLE WORKE; Consisting of Additions, and Emendations.

Pag. 65. lin. 28.

A Quite him. How much more equall is the resolution of Master Foxe, in his Acts, and Monuments: where like an Advocate for Saint Catherine, he pleadeth thus. I have oftentimes (saith he) before complained, that the stories of Saints have beene powdered and sawied with diverse untrue additions and fabulous inventions of men, who either out of a superstitious devotion, or of a sub-tile practise, have so mingle mangled their stories and lives, that almost nothing remaineth in them simple and incorrupt, as in the usuall Perseffe, wont to be read for daily service, is manifest and evident to bee seene, where in few Legends there bee able to abide the touch of History, if they were truly tryed. This I write on the occasion, specially of good Catherine, whom now I have in hand: in whom although I nothing doubt, but in her life was great holineste, in her knowledge excellency, in her death constancy: yet that all things be true that be storied of her, neither dare I affirme, nor am I bound so to thinke. So fage, and in these very words doth hee pleade for her. Which plea of his, changing the name only and the person, will most exactly correspond to our blessed Martyr: whose story hath beene mangled no less than her, and that both by the Legendaries, out of a superstitious devotion;

votion; and by the hereticks of a subtile practise, as before is shewed. And I rather doe produce this plea of Master Foxe, because thir Catharine is brought in by Doctor Boys and others, together with Saint George, astwen of thole 3. Saints (8. Christopher is the other) whose stories Bellarmino confesseth, as it is objected, to bee Apocryphall and uncertaine.

Pag. 71. lin. 16.

—— called Discipulus de tempore, reade thus the Author that calls himselfe Discipulus. The errour was occasioned by the title of my Booke, which is Sermones discipuli de tempore per circulum anni. This made me thinke that hee had called himselfe Discipulus de tempore; till looking further in him, I noted that the sermons appointed for the festivals of some speciall Saints, and amongst others for Saint George were stiled Sermones discipuli de Sanctis. and that a head-roll of examples, which he hath there collected, is also called Promptuarium discipuli. This satisfied mee that hee was not called, Discipulus de tempore, but Discipulus only: which name he tooke upon himselfe, as himselfe tells us, quod in istis sermonibus non subtilia per modum magistri, sed simpliciter per modum discipuli, conscripta sunt. His name, as at the last it is expressed, by him that published him, was Iohn Herolt, a Fryer of Saint Dominicks Order; for so it ends, Fuit operum perutile simplicibus curam animarum gerentibus, per venerabilem & devotum Iohannem Herolt S. Dominici sectatorem professum, Discipulus nuncupatus. The booke, that which I have, Printed at Straibourg. Anno 1484. Of the Authors time, I am uncertaine, but probably may conjecture, that he lived, about the yecre 1450. if not before.

Pag. 75. lin. 18.

—— the locall being of it. Origen, as in the generall hee was too much addicted to the allegory: so he is said by Epphanius, to have made the history and description of Paradise,

rdise, to be meerely allegoricall. Αλληγορεῖ ὁ λοιπὸν ὅσα τῶν διώα), τὸν τε ᾠκεῖσιν, &c. As that father hath it. But on the contrary Epiphanius affirms expressly, as truth is, that without question, [ἡ ἀληθεία] it was ἐπὶ τῇ γῆς τόπος, a certaine and particular place upon the earth: and saith that Origen doth φλυαρεῖν, or play the trifler, in saying otherwise.
So Ambrose also, doth a little savour in this point of Origen, though happily they jumped not in the same particulars.
For hee conceiveth that by Paradise, was meant the soule, wherein God planted every vertue; Sapience being the tree of Life, our Saviour Christ, being the fountaine there mentioned, and the foure streames thereof, the foure Cardinall vertues. Viātur Paradisus animæ esse, &c. cap. 1. And in the 3. chap. quis sors, nisi Dominus Iesus Christus, sors vita æterna? &c. And yet Saint Hierome cries downe this and the like conceits, as dreames and dotages, tending unto the overthrow of the trueth it selfe. Conticescant eorum deliramenta (saith he) qui umbras & imagines in veritate sequentes, ipsam conantur evertere veritatem, ut Paradisum, & flumen & arbores, putent allegoria legibus se debere subnuere. So then, nor Origen, nor S. Ambrose, nor others which since followed them in the same conceits, were able so farre to prevaile, in making Paradise to be allegoricall: but that the locall being of it, hath beene still beleevd. Nor I presume, shall Doctor Reynold, Villa-vincensius, Hyperius, or Baronius, with their allegoricall expositions and glosses on Saint Georges portraiture so possesse the world: as thereby to subvert, and utterly overthrow the truth of story. Yet I condemne not thes conceits or any others; so they be taken for con-ceits onely, as before I said.

Pag. 85. l. 8.

George and Gregory, the two Arian Bishops of Alexandria.

Ec 3

Page

Pag. 98. lin. 20.

— as he there hath it. The passage more at large, is this. Those of the Arian faction not daring to referre themselves to a lawfull councell, touching the restitution of Athanasius whom they had deposed, unto his see: addresse themselves unto Constantine, the chiefe patron of their side, saying unto him ὁρᾷς πάντας ἀποσταύτας ἀπ' ἡμετέρῃς, &c. You see, say they, how we are generally forsaken, few of us left, and therefore you must needs begin the persecuti- on. Otherwise such, as in the exile of their Bishops, were forced to bee of our communion; on their returne and by their perswasion, will revolt from us. Γεγυῖον ἐν ἡμῶν πάντων, καὶ πέμψον Φιλάργιον δούλον ἑπαιχλόν τῆς Αἰγυπτῆς αὐτῶν τοῖς γὰρ ἐπιτηδεύουσιν διατάττει διακείν, ἥδη γὰρ τῇ πείρᾳ δείξας. Πέμψον δὲ καὶ Γρηγόριον ἐπίσκοπον εἰς Ἀλεξάνδρειαν, καὶ ὅσα γὰρ διατάττει σου σέσωκε τίμω ἡμετέραν αἵρεσιν. Write therefore your com- mands unto them, and make Philagrius once more Go- vernour of Egypt, a man well skilled in persecuting the adverse party, as you know very well, and by late ex- perience. Send also Gregory to bee the Bishop of Alexandria, as one that wee are well assured, is able to promote our tenets. What followed upon these sug- gestions; but that which followes in the Author? viz. that all was done as they requested. Γεγάστ τοῖς γενομένοις, &c. Constantine, saith hee, sent abroad his edicts, and began the persecution, using therein the diligence of this Philagrius, and of one Arsenius an Eunuch. And not so only, but πέμψον δὲ καὶ Γρηγόριον μετὰ στρατιωτικῆς ἐξουσίας, he dispatched Gregory away, with a band of Souldiers. And for a further prooffe, that he there speakes of Gregory, and not of George: after he hath in brieft described his cruelties and misdemeanours, hee tels us this, that upon notice of his dealings, and by the mediation of the young Emperour Constans, unto Constantine his brother, a Synod by their joint

Pag. 818.

joynt consents, was called at Sardica. Εως δὲ ταῦτα ἐγίνετο, ἤλθον εἰς μῶσιν τὸ βασιλεὺς Κωνσταντῖνος, &c. As hee there hath it. Now George, was not made Bishop of the Alexandrians, till just ten yeeres after the calling of that Councell: therefore not George, but Gregory, was Philagrinus country-man. Secondly Athanasius tells us, &c.

Pag. 100. lin. 5.

—about himselfe. The passage at the full, as it is in Philostorgius, because he is no obvious Author, is this as followes. The Emperour Constantius being enformed by Athanasius, with what injustice he was dispossessed of the see of Alexandria, thus wrot unto Constantius. Αθανάσιος ἔχεν πρὸς ἡμᾶς, ταυτῷ προσέειπεν τῷ ἐπισκόπῳ τῷ Ἀλεξανδρείας ἀποδείκνυς. Τυγχάνω τοίνυν διὰ σοῦ παύτης· ἐπεὶ τοῖς ἐμοῖς γὰρ αὐτῷ ἀνακλίσσεται ὅπλοις. Athanasius being here, saith he, had made sufficient prooffe that the Bishoprick of Alexandria belongs to him. Take order therefore that he be restored unto it, or we shall repossesse him by force of armes. It followes in the story, that Constantius having received these letters, did call his Bishops unto Counsaile, by whom it was resolved, that it was better farre to permit Athanasius returne to Alexandria, then venture battaile with his brother. Vpon which consultation, hee revoked George by speciall letters, who presently obeyed, and returned as before is said, to Cappadocia his owne Countrie, &c. But heare the Author in his owne language, Δεξάμενον δὲ τῷ ἑταίρῳ τὸν Κωνσταντῖνον (for so it followeth in the story) καὶ τὸν ἐπισκόπον ἐπὶ κοινωνίᾳ βουλῆς συγκαλέσαντα, γράμμῃ παρ' αὐτῶν λαβὼν, ἄμεινον εἶναι, μὴ πόλεμον ἀναρρῆσαι τῷ ἀδελφῷ, ἢ τῆς Ἀθανασίου βαρύνεσθαι τῷ Ἀλεξανδρίαν ἀπαλλάξαι· διὸ καὶ ἐφίεναι αὐτῷ τῷ ἐπισκόπῳ ἀναλαεἶν, καὶ τὸν Γεώργιον μὲν ἐπιστολῆς ἐπ' ἑαυτὸν μεταπέμψασθαι.

E c 4

Εἶν,

 Αλλ' ὁ μὲν εἰς τῇ αὐτῇ πατρίδα τὴν Καππαδοκίαν ἀφίκατο, κα-κῶ δὲ ἄλλῳ τῷ καθ' ἑαυτὸν ἐπισκοποῦμεν. This seems ex-pressc. &c.

Page 105. lin. 37.

— 36. 26. Which being so there may perhaps bee somewhat said to reconcile that difference, which seemes to be twixt Nazianzene and Ammianus, supposing that ὁμοῦρον in Nazianzen, must bee rendred borne. For seeing Epiphania was, as it is apparant, in the extremity of the lesser Asia, towards Sinus Issicus; why may not the ἐκ τῆς ἐχάτιον τῇ ἡμετέρῃ, of Nazianzene, be referred to the whole continent of Anatolia; and not to Cappadocia onely.
 For my part I can see no reason but it may: the Greeke word ἡμετέρῃ, easily bearing that extent. Which exposition of the text, if it be admitted, the controversie were then almost ended, and all the maine of the objection would rest on Athanasius: Who knowing Gregory to bee a Cappadocian; and finding George, who came from thence, to be so like him in conditions: might easily conceive that hee was his Country-man. Not to affirme, as those of Adag-deburg doe, I thinke too rashly; that that which doth concerne these two Arian Bishops Gregory and George, Ita confuse narratur ab Athanasio; ut alterum ab altero vix possit discernere.

Gen. 4. c. 11, do bores,

Page 127. lin. 35.

— and Surinus: saying that one chiefe circumstance of the history, is not expressed in their translations; which we shall specify in the next Chapter.

Page

Pag. 145. lin. 12.

——the monkish writers of thosetimes, Consull Glocestria; William the Conquerour, Consul Normannia, (o Algarnus Lib. 6. Consul Cestria, Sewardus Consull rigidissimus, in Henry Huntingdon: and in the former Booke, Consules Pagani, is used to signifie the chiefe Commanders and principall men amongst the Danes. Nor in our English Writers onely of those times, and kind, but such as had more intercourse with the affaires of the Roman Empire. Witness the Charter of Frederik the second, Emperour of Sicilie, dated Anno 1220. in which the word Consul is used to intimate some principall Officer in the state distinct from Earle. For so the Charter: Fredericus Dei gratia Romanorum Rex, semper Augustus, & Rex Sicilia. Omnibus Potestatibus, Consulibus, Comitibus, universorum Comitatum & Castrorum Italia. Cum diva memoria Imp. Romani, &c. Other examples of this kind, are infinite and obvious.

Pag. 163. lin. 24.

——Henry Orans. [To make the number yet more full, I must crave leave to adde some more, both Princes, Prelats, and Authors of especiall credit, which have made mention of Saint George, and are omitted, but ought to have a place in the Catalogue as the others have. They are these that follow.

Sect. 6 Georgius Presbiter, in the life of Theodorus Syceotes, Sect. 8 Ordo Romanus.

949 Almericus the first, Marquis of Ferrara.

999

- 990 Agnes Countesse of Anjou.
 1000 Anno Archbilhop of Colen.
 1106 Gesta Francorum per Anonymum.
 1145 Emanuel Comnenus Emperour of Constant.
 1155 Henry Huntingdon.
 1190 Appendix ad Radevitiun.
 1295 Iacobus Cardinalis Sancti Georgij de Velo aureo.
 1350 Ranulphus Cestrensis.
 1375 Simon de Sudbury, Archb. of Canterbury.
 1414 Henry Chicheley Archb. of Canterbury.
 1420 Thomas de Walsingham, I know not by what over- sight misplaced before.

Self. 15 Iohn Herolt, who calls himselfe Discipulus, a Dominican Fryer.

1540 Iulius Cesar Scaliger.

1541 Geor. Vicelinus.

1581 Henricus Pantaleon. p. 126. 197.

~~Henricus Pantaleon. p. 126. 197.~~
 p. 60. 200. 205 201.

16. lin. 9.

———Romish party, the Greeke Church in Hierusalem, the Church of Ethiopia, some Churches also, and not few learned men in such the Churches of the Reformation, &c:

Pag. 186. lin. 22.

———more hereafter. But by Vicelinus leave, Επισημο should be rendred rather Conquerour and Victorious, then Standard-bearer. Or if a Standard or Ensigne-bearer, a bearer onely of those Ensignes, which either were taken from the enimie; or such wherein the overthrow of the enimie is describ'd and painted. So Stephanus glosseth on

on the word, Τροπαιοφίδες, Trophaum gestans; ejusmodi trophaa putantur fuisse vexilla hostibus crepta, vel etiam in quibus In Theſaur. descripta & depicta esset, ἢ ἑστὶ πολέμων. This he exemplifieth by a place and passage out of Lucians Dialogues: where Mercurie asks of Craton, πῶς τοῦ Τροπαίου αὐτοφάγετος; and hee makes answer, ὅτι ἐνίκησιν καὶ ἡλίσδουσιν, καὶ ἡ πόλις ἐπιμύσσει με, &c. However this last adjunct.

Pag. 219. lin. 12.

——— Gregory 13. The words are these. Cap. de Diebus in honorem omnipotentis Dei & Sanctorum ejus dicatis, nullatenus in Curia Capitoli jus redditur. Sunt autem qui sequuntur. Omnes dies Dominici. Then for particular holydaies, as they are ranked in severall months; thus: De mense Aprilis, Sancti Georgij Martyris; Sancti Marci Evangelista. So farre the Statute. Somewhat.

Pag. 232. lin. 5.

——— Hist. lib. 3. cap. 27. To which may best bee added, as a concurring testimony of the Greekes in generall, Saint Georges Church in Venice: which hath beene set apart, a long time together for the particular service of that people; therein to exercise their devotions, according to their ownes rites and ceremonies. Which being ruinous, and by Crusius apud Selden. tit. of hon. them repaired Anno 1564. was in the name of all the Grecians that lived there, and such as usually resorted thither, Pag. 803. dedicated to our Saviour and S. George, with this ἑνὸς ἁγίου.

ΧΡΙΣΤΩ ΣΩΤΗΡΙ ΚΑΙ ΤΩ ΑΓΙΩ ΜΑΡΤΥΡΙ
ΓΕΩΡΓΙΩ, ΟΙ ΜΕΤΟΙΚΟΙ ΚΑΙ ΟΙ ΚΑ-ΤΑΙΡΟΝΤΕΣ ΕΝΕΤΙΑΣΕ ΤΩΝ ΕΛ-ΛΗΝΩΝ ΕΚ ΤΩΝ ΕΝΟΝΤΩΝ ΦΙΛΟΤΙΜΗΣΑΜΕΝΟΙ.

Pag.

Pag. 237. l. 7.

—his owne signet. His owne words best deserve place here, being the Author is not easie to be met withall. Huius autem gloriosissimi Martyris caput (saith hee) dudum perbeata memoria Zachariam Papam natione Gracum, in venerabili Patriarchio, vulgo Sancta Sanctorum nuncupato, cum Græco id ipsum significante Epitaphio repertum; & per eundem Pontificem ad venerabilem Diaconiam Romanae urbis eiusdem Martyris insignitam vocabulo, i. e. ad velum aureum, cui licet innumeris, serviendo præsidentibus, celebriter delatum; in eadem nostra ecclesia presentialiter vidimus, oculis nostris inspicimus, manibus nostris consecretivimus, & cum eodem Epitaphio inibi in vase argenteo reperimus, repertumque reposuimus, ac ad eandem eius custodiam sigillum nostrum præfato vase argenteo, ubi caput ipsum cum eodem Epitaphio inerat reverenter appendimus; quod mihi debita reverentia colitur, debita veneratione honoratur: ac ut Romanis cunctis pateat, cunctis que translationis ejus modus innotescat, translationem ipsam, verbis proprijs, ut in ecclesia nostra reperimus, subiungimus. After which, followes that which before we have related out of Anastasiu, to this very purpose. For close of all, adde here that long before the time of this Iacobus Cardinalis, I finde a Charter granted by Pope Alexander the third, to a new Monasterie of Benedictine Monkes, dated 1177. subscribed amongst other Cardinals by Rainerius Diaconus Cardinalis S. Georgij ad velum aureum: which was above an hundred yeeres before this Iacobus.

Bero 1. ad An.
1177. N. 21.

Pag. 245.

In stead of that which you finde cited in the margin; which is there misplaced, and was before noted in the margin of the former page: reade, Tales of honour, part second, chap. third, sect. 24.

Pag.

Pag. 272. l. 30.

— A third in Tours, founded by Geofrey, Earle of Anion. The place and persons are mistaken. It was μυμνικός lapsus, and must thus be mended: a third in Vendosme, founded by the Lady Agnes, wife of Geofrey, surnamed Martell, Earle of Anion, who succeeded Earle there, Anno 987. and lived unto the time of William, Duke of Normandie, called the Conquerour. Of which foundation, thus du Chesne in his Recherches. Agnes épouse du susdit Geofroy Comte d'Anion, fonda aussi l'église collégiale de S. George, en mesme chasteau Pag. 258: [the said Castle of Vendosme] et l'enrichit du glorieux titre de La chapelle de Comte. We also read, &c.

Pag. 277. l. 36.

— on horse-backe. Which if it fully prove not that which is intended, as I thinke it doth, yet I am sure this will which is now to follow. I meane that place and passage of Eucharius before remembred: who in speaking unto Constantinus Monomachus, immediately almost upon the words there already specified, adds jointly of Saint George and the blessed Virgin, this.

Οὗτοι κατ' ἐχθρῶν ὅπλα σοι νικηφόρα,
 Μεθ' ὧν κρατεῖς τὰς κατὰς εἰς τέλος.
 Ἐν οἷς φυλάξεις ἐντοχὰς σὸ το κράτος.

These are the conquering weapons which subdue
 Your mightiest enemies: and wherewith you Both doe, and shall prevaile unto the end,
 And your most flourishing state, by them defend.

Pag. 302.

Pag. 302. l. 30.

in verbo He-valdus, p. 319.

— or adorne them. Nor did hee onely adde those armes before remembred unto the portraiture or image of Saint George; but for a further honour to him, and in relation to those armes, he gave unto his principall Pursuivant, the name of Rouge-crosse. So witnesseth Sir Henry Spelman in his Glossarium, thus. Rouge-Crosse pre alijs, antiquitate pol-let: dictus a cruce rubra que S. Georgius (divus Anglorum intularis, ut Dionysius Francorum) insignitur. But whether that his Pursuivant so by him appointed, was destinate to the particular service of the order, before first Windsore Herald, and after Garter King of Armes were instituted, I cannot say. From henceforth.

Pag. 306. l. 25.

— then in use. His owne words best expresse his meaning. Dicuntur quidem duplicia Festa (hee speaks of such as are maiora, or in totum duplicia) pro eo quod responsoria canto maiora quam brevia, et versus, a duobus cantantur, & quod omnia incipienda, a duobus incipiunt, & quod Antiphona in matutinis & vespertis duplicantur, dicuntur prius completa & ante psalmum & post. So saith Durandus, Note next, &c.

Pag. 327. l. 29.

— Or say she were, yet is it not a likely matter, that she should be King Edward's Mistress, meant by Polydore.
For who can possibly suppose, that &c.

Pag. 337

Pag. 337. l. 20.

— or Bannerets, (for so I take it is the custome at the present, though by the Statute, Bannerets are ranked with Barons, and did contribute equally to all publick charges.) then ascendendo the next followeth.

Pag. 339. l. 27.

— his country-men. But verily this was either an excuse onely in the Embassadour, because he was not willing to receive that Order, from any but his owne Sovereigne: or else the order of Knighthood hath beene since more frequent in that kingdome, as I thinke it hath. For John Cluvierus in the Epitome historiarum, by him lately published, Anno 1630. informes us this, that in the yeere 1616, at the investiture of Fredrick, Duke of Sleswick, in the possessions of his Father, Duke John Adolphus Christian Fry, Chancellour of Danemarke, George Longe, Constable, Albert Schœl, Admirall, George Schœl, the Marshall, and Roxen-orantius, one of the privie Councell, together with eight others of chiefe eminence, were by this Christiane, King of Danemarke, created Knights. Which happily comparing this with that of the Embassador before remembred, might be the first time that ever the order of Knighthood had beene given to any in that Kingdome. But to goe forwards, if Ibid. l. 30.

— into the Order. At putting on of which, the Sovereigne or his Deputie, or some other of the Knights as his appointment, useth this forme of words, or some such other to "this purpose, viz. Sir, the loving Order of the Garter hath received you their brother, lover, and fellow, and in token and knowledge thereof, they give and present you this

"this Garter. (See what was said before to this purpose
 "chap. 2. sect. 6.) the which God will that you receive
 "and weare from henceforth to his praise and pleasure,
 "and to the exaltation and honour of the said noble or"der, and of your selfe. In these words runnes my English copie. After, at such time as the Sovereigne shall appoint upon the reading of his Commission in the Chapter house at Windfore, before the Sovereigne or his Deputie, the Mantle and the Hood are delivered to him, the rest of the Companions of the said noble order being then in presence.
 Then follows the installment, performed with many grave, solemn, and magnificent ceremonies: the Knight that is to be installed, being conducted between two others of the said noble order unto his stall, accompanied with the Officers of the order, and such noble men as please to honour him with their presence: his Mantle also borne before him commonly by Garter, the chiefe King of Armes, though any of the Order, may otherwise discharge that office. Before his stall, he takes his oath (which presently we shall shew unto you) and is invested with his Mantle:
 whence solemnly returning unto the Chapter-house, (though now the Collar be delivered at the same time with the Hood and Mantle) he is to be presented by the Soveraigne or his Deputie, with the Collar of his Order, and from that time, &c.

Page 352. 422.

—or his thumb, a signet, on the which within a Garter, &c.

100. 1. 1. 1.

Ibid. 1. 35.

—the Carters mistook for Garter by the Printers. And que-stionless on some such mistake as this, the Knights themselves have in Hopman, got the name of Equeſtes Carterij, and Ordo Equitum Carteriorum: of which, see that Author, in his booke de Origine Monachatu.

Page 356.

Pag. 356. l. 15.

—some did, or that such others of them as are there omitted, were by the prevalent faction in the civill warres, put out and finally degraded, as questionlesse some were: I am not, &c.

Pag. 362. l. 12.

—Robert, Count Palatine. and Duke of Bavier: Rupertus he is called in the Germane Writers. It seemes this Prince was chosen into the Order, Anno 1399. which was the first of this King Henry: because he is here entred by no other name, then that of Count Palatine. For in the next yeere after, Anno 1400. he was elected Emperour of Germany, and solemnly inaugurated at Colen, by the Archbishop of that Citie: in which high dignitie he continued iust ten yeeres, and then deceased. Which his election to the order, was as it seemeth, in reference to a stronger bond of amitie, that was to be betwixt these two Princes. For in the yeere 1402. there was a marriage solemnized betweene this Emperours sonne, and the Lady Blanch, King Henries daughter: Of which, thus Walsingham, Hoc anno misit rex filiam suam cum grandi apparatu ad Coloniam Agrippinam, ubi nupsit adolescentulo filio Imperatoris. So for the generals, it is well enough resolved by others, though the particular be not yet agreed upon amongst our Genealogists. Kensler hath made this Ladies husband to be one Iohn, of the Bavarian Familie: but in the petigrees of that house, there is no such man, about these times living. Paradine in his line of the Dukes of Guyen, calls him Ronge or Rufus, fili de l' Empereur d' Allemagne, but the Emperour of Almaine then being, had no sonne so called. Raph Brooke, Torke Herald, more wide then any of the rest, hath married her to William, Duke of Bavaria, sonne and heire of Lewis of Bavaria, after, unto I know not what King of Arragon, and lastly, to a Duke of Barre:
Ff and.

*Prodigm.
Nestr.*

and all alike. Lewis of Bavaria, died in the yeere 1347. above 50 yeeres before this marriage: and William his son, being in his mothers right and title, Earle of Holland, but neither his eldest son, nor Duke of Bavier, except in title onely, after the German fashion; married the Lady Mande daughter of Henry first Duke of Lancaster. Perhaps that deceived him: Nor could she be a 2 wife to that Earle Will. who decessed Anno 1377. 35. yeeres before this King bestowed his daughter. Therefore to set this matter right, (as also the bestowing of the 2. daughter of this King, wherof more in the next place) with the good leave of my Masters the Heralds, I must thus farre give answer to M^r. Torke, that this Ladies husband was Ludovicus, surnamed Cecus and Barbasus, son to that Emperour Rupertus, who was elected of the Order by this King. Which Ludovicus had by her, a sonne called Rupertus, after his grand-fathers name; and surnamed Anglicus, from his mother: who died ten yeeres before his father, Anno 1426. As for the other husbands, whom M^r. Torke ascribes unto her; its plaine shee had them not, unlesse in the Elizian fields: as dying long before this husband, who after her decess, Anno 1418. married a Lady of the house of Savoy for his second wife. So much, and that which is to follow, to rectifie the errours of our common Genealogist, touching the line of this K. Henry: occasioned by this Rupertus, and Henry or Ericus King of Sweden, both chosen of the Order by our Kings, the Sovereignes, in reference to these alliances.

Pag. 364. lin. 6.

———K. Henries sister. About this K, I finde great difference in my Authors. Some printed Catalogues of the Order, call him Christierns: Raph Brooke, Torke Herald, makes that K. of Denmarke, which married the Lady Philippe, to be called Iohn, and Rensner in his Genealogicon informes us, that the wife of this Ericus, was daughter unto Edward K. of Portugall. But certainly they are all mistaken. That one of K. Henry the 4. daughters was married to a K. of Denmarke, Sweden

Sweden and Norway, (for then the kingdomes were united), ^{In Hen. 4.} is evident by Walsingham: who tels us this, that in the yeere 1405 Domina Regis filia (which was this Lady Philip) præconis voce proclamata est Regina Dacia, Norwagie, & Suavia, siue Suecie, &c. That at that time and before, Ericus D. of Pomerania, was by his Aunt Q. Margaret, declared her successor in those kingdomes, and had the name of K. into the which he did succcede, Anno 1412 is a thing knowne to all that have searched those histories: no K. of any of those Northerne nations, being called Christierne, or Iohn, in long time after. And lastly that the Lady Philippe was daughter of K. H. the 4 and not of Edward K. of Portugal, is first apparent, by the Genealogies of the house of Portugal, who give K. E. no such daughter: and secondly by the testimony of Iohn Cluverius, a Danish writer, and still alive to make it good; who tels us truly, that in the yeere 1430 Philipparegina (wife of this Henry or Ericus) Henrico 4. Anglorum Rege genita, sine prole decessit. ^{Epitom. hist. p 733.}

Pag. 366. lin. 21.

— Windforetables. This Knight, by Edward Hall the ^{In Hen. 5.} Chronicler, is called Sir Henry Tanclux, corruptedly for Heretongs, Clux, by which name he is found mentioned in the Registers. Nor doe I thinke that Heretongs was his Christian name, but his title onely: mistooke for Heretoches, ^{Spallmes p 348} which in the German and old Saxon, signified a Captaine, ^{Cap. 35 sub. tit. 1416. vid} Marshall, or some such Officer of the field. Witnesse the ^{de Heretochis. Tanclux} laws of S. Edward the Confessour, which enforme us thus: Sunt & alie potestates, &c. per singulos comitatus totius regni constituta, qui Heretoches apud Anglos vocabantur: Latine dicebantur antiores exercitus; apud Gallos, Capitales, Constabularij, vel Mariscalli exercitus. Ordinabant autem acies densissimas in praelijs, &c. This makes me confident that Heretongs Clux, in the Windfore Registers, signifies onely Captaine Clux, or some such like military title. And why not he a Duchman, as likely to bee entred by the name of his place or office; by which he commonly was knowne: as that in the very same Registers, John de Foix, a Frenchman, should bee remembered in some places by no other name, then that of Capitaine de Bouches, which was his ordinary stile, as it was his place.

Page. 374. l. 16,

Note that this John Vilc. Welles ought to be placed next after Edward Lord Widdewile, whom hee succeeded in his stall; though both elected in the same yeere: Edward Lord Widdewile not living long to enjoy his honour, as being slaine that yeere in Bretagne.

p. 401. Note lastly, that whereas in the 4: Chap: and in the 8. Sect. of this last part, Thomas Lord Wriothesley first E. of Southampton, is said to be the son of Sir Tho. Wriothesley K. of Armes: it should have beene, that he was grandchilde of Sir John Wrishe or Wriothesley, K. of Armes before remembred; his father being William Wriothesley, York Herald, being the elder brother of the said Thomas Wriothesley King of Armes.

This following Historie of Saint George in old English moeter, comming unto my hands just at the finishing of the Booke, out of a Manuscript in the Librarie of the right Honourable, and right Reverend Father in God, my Lord Bishop of London, I am constrained to place here in the Review. Which had I sooner met withall, ought to have had roome in the first Chapter of this last part, amongst such testimonies as have beene given unto this Saint by our English Writers. The Author by his language, seemes to be of good antiquity, and by his composition, of no lesse modellie: there being nothing in him, of that exploded sterie of the Dragon, nor any thing, wherein hee differs from our most approved Authors, unlesse it may be thought that the conclusion favours somewhat of poetick libertie. But for the historie in the same words that he relates it, take it thus:

SEIGNT GEORGE the hell man, as we fynde wyte
 In the Land of Cappadoce yhere was and byzke,
 The false Goddes he forsake, and toke to Christendome,
 And loved well Jesu Chyst, and hely man bcome.
 Dacian the luther Prince that was in thiss stound,
 All Christen men that he found, he let bring to ground,
 As he a day honoured his false Goddes, and other many one,
 Betwixt GEORGE all it sawe, as he therforth gan gon,
 The signe he made of the Crosse, and blessed him all about,
 And armed him with the Holy Ghost, within and without,
 And went forth baldelich, loude he gan to grede,
 To Dacian, and all his, and these wordes he seide.
 All false Goddes deeth Debeles Chikenes yholis,
 For our Lord heben made, in the Sauter wyitten it is.
 * Tho Dacian herd this, he groned, and fained false,
 And loured with luther semblance, and these wordes outcast.
 Bel: my what artow that so hardy art and bold,
 That in our poer, on our Goddes such Tales hast told?
 * Then dost us not * on shame, as we all seeth,
 * Ac our Goddes whan then seist that thei Debeles beeth.
 Tell me sone what thou art, and what is thy name,
 That darst to our Goddes sigges to helldith such shame!
 GEORGE That quoth this other Christen man I am,
 And of the Land of Cappadoce, hither to pass I cam

* when

* onely

* But

p for fallen

* also took

* These

It were

* when saw

* cryed

* counsell

Belamy, quoth Dacian, turne thy thought anon,
 And honour our Goddess, er it shall an other gon.
 He still quoth Saint George, for thou spekest * unbecomight,
 For I have in Iesu Christ biser all my thought,
 A Crapout quoth Dacian, wile on take on so,
 Thou halt in other ribaudie sons dayes be do.

He let him hong up on hey in maner Rode,
 And thereto binde him fast naked with ropes strong and gode,
 With keen * onles ther bierth tormentours ther Rode,
 And all to draw his holy limes, that they ranne al o' blod e.
 Withel to drawe his tender flesh, the peeces fell to ground,
 Brenning ople * Ath they * nome, and cast in his wound.
 Tho thet had him long to draw, that reuth was to sen,
 Thet bithought hem on more shame, and toke him don of the tree,
 With hard scourges thet leyd on him, and wound up e other made.
 To the bare ban the scourges com, as the onles had er y wade.
 * Thet woundes thet toke and salt thet, & the salt thet thet caste,
 And thet with an haire clout robbed it wel faste
 A Lord much was the pine that eche ops other was there, Reuth it was such pine to ses, who so of reuth were,
 And never lay this holy man as him nothing * nere,
 To salt so that quike flesch and robbe with an here.

* Tho Dacian * seye that he ne might overcome him so,
 He lette binde this holl man, and in strong prisonn do.
 They * fondede so in echo maner if they might turne his thought,
 But thet seye tho will yehone that it was al for nought.

Dacian let make a wheol of Bras so strong so he might,
 And sharpe Swerdes thikke aboute thereon fast he pight,
 And let take this holl man, and there above him do,
 That the Swerdes shold his body kerne ebene a two.
 Anon to this holl man above this wheol was brought,
 The wheol to brake as God it wold, and brude al to nought,
 So that this holl man harmeles therof was,
 Wel sooth was Dacian tho he seye this cas.

A furnace he let take of Bras, and fulde it full of Led,
 A strong fyre he let make, as he nom so his * red.
 Tho it was al y melt and boyled ful faste,
 He let nime this holl man, and amidde him caste,
 Saint GEORGE, toke up his bonde & the Cross before him made,
 And in the swelling led wel hardliche gan wade.
 Therinne he sat ful stille down as him nothing * nere,
 And lenede him to byrde as he on slepe were.
 And lay as he in rest were till that the Led at laste
 Was all into cold yturned that boyled er to faste.

Lord michel is thy might, and that was there sene,
 That any man in swelling led so might harmeles bene,
 Tho Dacian this y seye his wit was neybinome, Mahonde he seyde hou goeth this, where is our might become

He sat on him another dom, it nas n of fozete;
 He let draw this Hoi man wel villich thorwe the Strete;
 He'r wepne they dyabls forth, and whetted it hene to bite, (smite) Til thei come without the Town, ther thei waulden his hed of "Leobe Bzerheren quoth Seint George, a stounde abideth zite, *lovinge Til I have to Jesu Christ mi preyere do a lite.
 His hands he held up on hey, down he sat on knes,
 Lord he seyde, Jesu Christ that all thing might see,
 Graunte me if it is wille, that whoso in faire manere
 Halt wel my day in Iberil, for my love in erth here,
 That there ne fall in thilke Houf no qualm in al the yere;
 Ne great Sekness, ne Honger, that therof be no fere,
 And who in perill of the See to me bidde his bone,
 Or in ether stede perillous, help him thereof sone.
 Tho herde thei a Wois of hevene, that to him seyde this;
 Com forth he seide mi blessed child, thi bone he rd it is.
 Tho his Hede was off y smyte, as all that folke y seye,
 Angels toke his soule, and bar up to heben on hey.
 Ther he is in grete loye, that lasteth withouten ende.
 Now God for Seint G E O R G E love, us lets all chlder frende.

FINIS.

THE LIBRARY OF THE
MUSEUM OF MODERN ART
1000 MUSEUM AVENUE
NEW YORK, N. Y. 10028

THE
LIBRARY OF THE
MUSEUM OF MODERN ART
1000 MUSEUM AVENUE
NEW YORK, N. Y. 10028

ERRATA.

Page 12, line 37. read a Peter too. p. 21. l. 6. r. 4. p. 24. l. 33. r. under. p. 30. l. 21. r. might be thought to be. p. 34. l. 13. r. some story. p. 42. l. 7. r. by whom (saith he:) p. 47. l. 27. r. a christian Virgin. p. 99. l. 20. & 25. r. ἐκκλησία / & ἐκκλησίας. p. 100. l. 3. r. to. ib. 24. r. Court. p. 105. l. 18. r. at the first. p. 112. l. 9. adde, but such a letter. p. 147. l. 7. r. of Bythinia. p. 151.
 l. 11. r. ἡ γῆ. p. 192. Let the Greeke words which are misprinted, bee mended thus. l. 11. πέντε μισθία l. 16. μη λαθῶν l. 17. τὸ σε βέλημα. l. 20.
 & δεῦρ σε. l. 21. δὲ αὐτοῖς. p. 200. l. 1. r. for. p. 201. l. 22. dele 25. p. 215. l. 20.
 r. then. p. 231. l. 34. r. by the said Emperor. p. 244 l. 24. r. the 8. Tome. p. 245. l.
 9. r. was strooke p. 264. l. 25. r. τροπαίοφρος. ib. 36. r. wounded. p. 276. l. 31. r.
 reuso. p. 277. l. 5. r. thy powers. p. 346. l. 6. r. have bin, &c. such literall errors as occurre, and sometimes the misprinting of a name, as also the mis-accenting of a few Greeke words: the Reader may as easily correct as note.

Alopecurus happo manu St. Vernon p. 2 Andersson p. 330
Anthe hugio ipate p. 208
Anthonis Flavus officinalis p. 38
Aquinas ut Grimaldi p. 176
Anna Comera p. 330
Arms Kozed East p. 28
Andersson Amid Amid p. 198
Arms Arms Arms p. 316

Hancock 197
 Dismissed (Apxon) B 229
 Dr. Bois 3983
 Dupuy Fitch 303-306
 Don John Spain Admiral 1945
 Diocypin - 208

E
Elizabeth Quinn. 347-342.

A.
A. J. W. 192. 130. 131.
B. J. 167-32. 33. 333.
Baenias 187. 188. 189.
Hesperius carolinianus 1349
Rois 181. 333.

~~Francis~~
Francis Augmentus 80
Francis 923

G.
Garba 320
St Road 19326
Goonjies 197276
Caryopsis 197276
Ganga of Alaporia 12020
Giridars 317

C. G. Linn
Confession of Faith 1777
Covenant of Right & Liberty 197
Council of Peace 182
Catechism of St. George Andrews 161
Capitulation of St. George 237
Chronicles 90
County of St. George 306
Cities of St. George 230 241
Cyclopedia 238 230 341
Compendium of Religious min. p. 12
Coramden p. 167-17

Hygigian 198.
Hayden 87
Hooker 74
Hobson

La Joubin 338
Halobry de verayno p. 13

K.
 Knowledge in 's' 217
 Knight of golden preading 322
 Kolofon Chappell 293 296

L
 Lag & Honey 341
 Little 179-80
 Learning experience 1800 1800

M
 Melancholy 208
 Menologist 208
 Maxims of Chapp 212
 Mouth-mouth clasp 330
 Many things changed in the little Michael ab yffell 176 179-80

N
 North-west in Buckingham 330

O
 Olophus 133
 Olophus volatilis 128 131.

P
 Paulus vagans 133
 Paffick 137
 Paffick 128

R
 Rufus of 7th century 79 80
 R. Exm. 133
 Rufus of 5th century 128 133 332
 Rufus 166
 Rufus 174
 Symeon metaphrastic. 128 129-130
 Subjekt made 54 134
 Subjekt 166
 Spence English poet 134
 Spelman 1400
 Sygne 400 Spaw 322
 Selton 322
 Tunko in 1752 1779

V
 Voffius 128
 Voffius 128 137
 Volatilis 131 128 322

D^r Heylin born at Burford p. 19

DIPUTACIÓ PROVINCIAL DE BARCELONA

Biblioteca de Catalunya

BIBL

10019

Reg. 533.958

Sig. R(2)

534-

Digitized by Google

